U. S. TO TAKE OVER WIRES

CHICAGO WILL GIVE FRANCE ACCLAIM TODAY

Bastille Anniversary Will Thrill All Citizens.

GREETINGS

Chicago celebrants of French Independence day will be greeted at the Auditorium massmeeting tonight by this message from M. J. J. Jusserand, French ambassador to America. It was wired yesterday to H. H. Merrick:

> Hearty greetings to the Chicago patriots. No greater dates in the history of human independence than the Fourth and the Fourteenth of July.
> Well may we celebrate both together. We French had something to do with your Fourth and you Americans with our Fourteenth.
> All honest nations are arrayed with us on the same side of the trench; we are sure to win. The days of autocracy are counted; those of universal liberty are at hand.

This is France's day.

The first ally of the United States—when it entered the family of nations—and its present ally in the great war will own Chicago on this—"Bastille day"—anniversary of that fateful day—July 14, 1789—when the French people tore down the old prison in Paris and with it the tyranny of their kings.

The celebration will begin at 8 o'clock this morning with the first great naval demonstration staged here since Chicago became a port. At that hour five United States warships, the gunboats Isla de Luzon, Essex, Yantic, Gopher, and Commodore will take position off shore along the lake front, from Randolph to Van Buren streets, under command of Capt. Edward A. Evers, United States naval reserve. Each will fly the tricolor of France at its masthead, with the Stars and Stripes at its stern.

Salvos from Ships.

At 12 o'clock sharp, in compliance with an official order from President Wilson, simultaneous salvos of twenty-one guns will be fired by each of these ships, the first time in Chicago's history that this has been done.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon there will be an official raising of the French flag in Grant park east of the Art institute to the accompaniment of another resounding salvo of guns, following which Lieut. Georges Flachaire, the French "ace of aces," will sing the "Marseillaise," and then, in his Spad battle plane, will fly over the field. Following this there will be maneuvers of reserve militia and naval reserves. This will be under command of Gen. Leroy Steward, Col. William N. Pelouze, and Capt. Evers, with Capt. William A. Moffett, commandant at Great Lakes, in general charge. The soldiers and sailors' retreat in Grant park will also be dedicated at this time.

Great Meeting in Auditorium.

In the evening will be the great meeting at the Auditorium, where Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Carl Vrooman, representing President Wilson, and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York will speak. Former Ambassador James W. Gerard was also scheduled to speak, but late yesterday a telegram was received from his physician in Washington by H. H. Merrick that Mr. Gerard was ill.

Attempts were then made to procure Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, but up to a late hour at night these had not been answered. If he is not present, his place will be taken by Clarence S. Darrow.

At the Auditorium meeting Lieut. Joseph Dobelle of the French army will sing the "Marseillaise" and "They Shall Not Pass," in French. Nelson N. Lampert will preside. Consuls from all of the allied nations will take part in the demonstration, and an additional international flavor will be lent it by the presence of the Royal Japanese Red Cross mission, now in Chicago, en route to France.

Messages from President Wilson, President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, Lord Reading, and Ambassador Jusserand will be read.

The Auditorium meeting will start at 8 o'clock and doors will open at

THREE U. S. CORPS NOW FACE HUNS; OUR MEN THERE

Reilly's Regiment in First; Prairie Division in Third.

Washington, D. C., July 13.—[Special.]—In announcing the formation of three army corps in France, with a total strength of from 700,000 to 750,000 men, Gen. March, the chief of staff, disclosed today that the One Hundred and Forty-ninth field artillery (Col. H. J. Reilly's Bucks) is part of the First army corps, which is stationed in the Chateau Thierry region where American troops have won their greatest successes of the war.

The One Hundred and Forty-ninth field artillery is the only Illinois regiment in the "Rainbow" division, which with three other national guard and two regular army divisions forms the First army corps. Indiana and Minnesota each have a regiment of artillery in the "Rainbow" division; Iowa has a regiment of infantry; Wisconsin three companies of infantry, and Michigan an ambulance company. The Michigan-Wisconsin division is also in the First army corps.

I. N. G. Division in Third Corps.

Gen. March also disclosed that the Illinois national guard division, which trained at Camp Logan, Texas, before going to France a month ago, is part of the Third army corps.

The Illinois division and the crack New York national guard division are grouped with two regular divisions, the Third and Fifth, and two national army divisons, the Eightieth, which trained at Camp Lee, Virgina, and the Seventy-eighth, which trained at Camp Dix, New Jersey, in forming the Third corps.

The Rainbow division was moved from the Toul sector to the Chateau Thierry region and the Michigan-Wisconsin division also was moved west. Part of this division had been on German territory near the Swiss border.

First Field Army Soon.

Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett is temporary commander of the First army corps. The commanding officers of the Second and Third corps and the location of these corps have not been announced. When another corps is formed the First field army of approximately 1,000,000 men will be organized.

Gen. March announced that shipment of American troops to France "is proceeding without any letup whatever."

More than 90,000 troops were transported last week alone, making 1,100,000 men abroad.

The First army corps comprises the following:

First division, regulars, commanded by Maj. Gen. Robert L. Bullard; Second division, regulars, Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy; Twenty-sixth, national guard, Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards; Forty-second, national guard [Rainbow], Maj. Gen. Charles T. Menhor; Forty-first, national guard [Sunset], Maj. Gen. Liggett; Thirty-second, national guard [Michigan and Wisconsin troops], Maj. Gen. W. G. Haan.

New York Troops in Second.

The Second corps is organized as follows:

Seventy-seventh, national army [New York troops], Maj. Gen. George B. Duncan; Thirty-fifth, national guard [Kansas and Missouri troops], Maj. Gen. William M. Wright; Eighty-second, national army [Alabama, Georgia, and Tennessee], Maj. Gen. William E. Burnham; Thirtieth, national guard [Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, and District of Columbia troops], Maj. Gen. George W. Read; Twenty-eighth, national guard [Pennsylvania troops], Maj. Gen. C. H. Muir; Fourth division, regulars, Maj. Gen. George H. Cameron.

In the Third corps are:

Third division regulars, Maj. Gen. Joseph E. Dickman; Fifth regulars, Maj. Gen. John E. McMahon; Seventy-eighth national army (Delaware and New York troops), Maj. Gen. J. M. McRae; Eightieth division, Maj. Gen. Adelbert Cronkhite; Thirty-third national guard (Illinois troops), Maj. Gen. George Bell Jr.; Twenty-seventh national guard (New York troops) Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan.

Commanders for the army corps are only temporary, Gen. March said, the policy of the war department being to wait until the various major generals have had experience in handling the corps units before making permanent selections.

Appointments as lieutenant generals will go to the officers selected for the permanent details.

CONCRETE MOTOR BOAT LAUNCHED; WILL COME HERE

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 13.—With pomp and ceremony as though it were a battleship of the line, the "Concrete," the first motor propelled concrete boat ever constructed, was launched in the Monongahela river this afternoon before a cheering crowd.

It is capable of making twelve miles an hour and will start tomorrow morning on an 1,800 mile trip down the Ohio, up the Mississippi, and Illinois to Chicago, where it will be inducted into the service of Uncle Sam as a naval recruiting aid.

Mrs. Lillian Russell Moore broke the champagne bottle wrapped in red, white, and blue ribbon over the bow of the latest addition to the American navy.

AUTO BUYER HAS SHADOW SEIZED

W. G. Tennant of the Tennant Motor company, 2447 Michigan avenue, and John E. Jones of the J. E. Jones Detective agency, Rector building, were arrested yesterday on a warrant sworn out by Jay J. Keith of 733 Waveland avenue. Mr. Jones said last night that he will have Keith arrested today by way of repartee.

Keith alleges that he bought an automobile of the Tennant Motor company and that Tennant hired Jones to shadow him after he missed a payment and that he was asked to pay a $60 detective bill for the shadowing before Tennant would accept an installment. Jones says Keith is "all wrong" in his charges, hence the promised counter attack with a fresh warrant.

Vienna Denies Reports of Overtures for Peace

AMSTERDAM, July 13.—A semi-official telegram received here today from Vienna says:

"There have been many rumors lately that Austro-Hungarian agents in Spain and Switzerland have been seeking to establish contact with entente emissaries with a view to making overtures for peace.' All such rumors are unfounded."

HUNS' EXPLOSIVE BULLETS USED ON U. S. TROOPS

BY EDWIN L. JAMES.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable. [Copyright: 1918.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE MARNE, July 13.—Examination of machine gun ammunition recently captured by the Americans shows the Huns have been using explosive bullets against our soldiers. I examined some of these captured bullets today. They look like ordinary copper covered bullets when the cartridge is intact, but when the cartridge was taken apart the base projectile was found hollowed out and the space filled with high explosive. On contact this bullet explodes, tearing a nasty hole, instead of making the usual clean bullet wound. Americans captured German machine guns and ammunition at Vaux. They immediately turned the guns against the Germans, who were making counter attacks, and so some of this explosive ammunition may have been used against the Boche before the nature of the bullets had been discovered. Explosive ammunition is not issued to machine gunners of any allied army.

CITY'S GARBAGE PLANT IS STOLEN!

Two men were arrested yesterday by the South Chicago police while in the act of driving away with a hoisting engine which belonged in the city garbage incinerator at Ninety-fifth street and Stony Island avenue. After the arrest an inventory showed that the most of the movable stuff in the $10,000 incinerator had gone on ahead.

The men arrested gave their names as William H. J. Courtes of 4064 South Dearborn street, and Kesnee Blackman of 3348 South State street. Blackman offered as his alibi that he is an expressman and was innocently hired by Courtes to remove the stuff.

The garbage disposal plant, built several years ago, has been standing unwatched and out in all weathers without caretaker, ever since the work of erection was dropped when it was partly completed. Everything about the place is going to wreck and decay, it was reported last night.

'MUST DESTROY GOD OF FORCE TO GAIN PEACE'

Lloyd George Says Foe Thrives on War Pillage.

(By Cable to The Chicago Tribune.)

LONDON, July 13.—"The god of brute force must this time forever be broken and burnt in its own furnace."

In this one sentence Premier David Lloyd George tonight summed up the war aims of the allies and gave the reply of the entente to the peace feelers which are being sent out from Berlin.

War Gains Encourage War.

"Germany has waged three wars," he said, "and each time she has added, through those wars, to her strength, to her power, to her guidance, to her influence, and each successive war she has waged has inevitably encouraged her on to the next. If she had had one check you would not have had this war.

"If this war succeeds in adding one square yard to her territory, of adding one cubit to her stature, of adding a single iota to her strength, it will simply raise their idea of militarism, for which the world is being sacrificed at the present moment.

"There must be no hugger-mugger peace. It must be a real peace. We are not waging war for the sake of killing or of being killed, but for the sake of establishing a just and durable peace for the world. You cannot make peace unless it is both just and likely to endure."

Make Peace of Humanity.

The prime minister was addressing the Canadian editors who were visiting England and to them he gave the promise that the British dominions will have a voice not only in the conduct of the war but in the making of the peace terms. That peace, he said, must be for humanity. He added:

"We in this country, who have lost hundreds of thousands and have had millions maimed, and you in Canada, whose casualties have amounted to scores of thousands, and Australia, who has also played her share in these things—we are not making these sacrifices in order to establish a fraud on this earth, and anything less than a real peace will be defrauding not this generation but the next generation—it will be defrauding humanity."

Dominions Have Agreed.

"This is a war in which we engaged the empire," the premier said, "when we had no time to consult the dominions as to policy, and it is perfectly true that the policy which we adopted to protect small nations in Europe was a policy embarked upon without any consultation with the dominions. But you approved of it. Henceforth you have the right to be consulted as to the policy beforehand, and this is the change which has been effected as a result of the war.

"The contributions which you have made to enforce these treaties have given you the undeniable right to voice in fashioning the policy which may commit you, and for that reason an imperial war cabinet is a reality.

Says They Are United.

"Another point in which you must have a voice is in the settlement of the conditions of peace. We have discussed war aims and the conditions under which we are prepared to make peace at the war cabinet.

"We arrived at an agreement on the subject last year with the representatives of the dominions, and we shall reconsider the same problems in the light of events which have occurred since—and we shall reconsider the whole of these problems, I have no doubt, in the course of the next few weeks.

"Canada and Australia and New Zealand—yes, and Newfoundland—they have all contributed their share of sacrifice and they are entitled to an equal voice with the representatives of these islands—will determine the conditions under which we are prepared to make peace. Unless I am mistaken, we are pretty well in agreement upon them."

BRITISH FLYERS DOWN 4,102 HUN PLANES IN YEAR

Mastery of Air Costs Allies Only 1,121 Machines.

LONDON, July 13.—British airmen brought down 4,102 hostile machines during the year ending July 1, the British press bureau announced tonight. During the same period the British lost 1,121 planes.

The bureau declared that British aerial superiority is continually growing and that the American output will give the allies a "very great advantage."

"During the year ending July 1 British airmen on the west front destroyed 2,150 hostile airplanes and drove down 1,083 out of control," the statement said.

"In the same period naval aviators, coöperating, shot down 623. The total of ours missing was 1,121.

"On the Italian front, during the last quarter, the British destroyed 165 enemy planes and drove down six out of control; on the Saloniki front, in the last half year, we destroyed twenty-one and drove down thirteen; in Egypt and Palestine, from March to June, we destroyed twenty-six and drove down fifteen."

Berlin Tells of Victories.

BERLIN, July 13.—Tonight's official statement dealing with aviation says:

"During June 468 hostile airplanes and 62 balloons were shot down. Two hundred and seventeen of the former are in our possession. We lost 153 airplanes and 51 balloons.

Two New French Aces.

PARIS, July 13.—The appearance of two new French aces, Second Lieutenants Bourgade and Nogues, is announced by the newspapers. Each aviator has gained ten victories. The thirty-eighth aerial victory of Lieut. Nungesser also is announced.

'INTERN ENEMIES,' CRY OF LONDON

LONDON, July 13.—Demanding a "clean sweep" in interning enemy aliens, London citizens today staged the biggest demonstration in Trafalgar square since the beginning of the war. One speaker who approved the government's compromise policy was howled down. The crowd then vociferously adopted an oral resolution declaring they would accept no such "half measure."

Tin "Bomb" Left on Bar Proves Wireless Outfit

A tin box, of peculiar design, left on the bar of the Silver saloon, Clark street and Chicago avenue, yesterday evening by an unknown man and believed by the bartender to contain explosives, was taken to the Chicago avenue police station, where it was found to contain a miniature wireless telegraph outfit.

SENATE GIVES WILSON VAST POWER, 46-16

Attempts to Except Phones and Press Lines Beaten.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., July 13.—[Special.]—By a vote of 46 to 16 the senate adopted tonight the resolution, already passed by the house, empowering the president to take over the telegraph and telephone wires. As soon as the proper signatures are attached to the measure on Monday the president will have authority to assume control of the wires.

All attempts to limit the power of the president were defeated and the bill passed in the form demanded by Mr. Wilson and his cabinet.

Although the statements of the cabinet officers indicated that the powers might be used as soon as granted, there has been no announcement as to just what the president intends to do or when. During debate on the resolution it was said the government would take over only trunk lines and connecting systems, leaving to their own managements the thousands of local and rural independent telephone systems throughout the country.

Adopt Three Day Notice Rule.

Under this construction it is possible that the president will seize the telephone systems in Chicago, New York, and other large cities, although some cabinet officials indicated tonight that the telephone lines will not be taken over for some time, if at all.

Immediately after this action the senate entered into a unanimous consent agreement to recess three days at a time until Aug. 26 and during that time to transact nothing but routine morning business. In its frantic haste to ring the recess gong the senate narrowly escaped tying itself up in an unbreakable agreement by which all legislation, no matter how great the emergency, would have been suspended for two months.

Can Take Local Phones.

Only the timely warning of Senator Johnson of California averted what might have proven an almost disastrous situation. The senator called attention to the fact that under the terms of the agreement one senator could keep the senate in a "straitjacket" and block any war measure that might be necessary during the next two months.

"This senate will be absolutely helpless for the next two months, no matter what may happen on the western front," Senator Johnson said. Several other senators heartily concurred in his view and the recess agreement was modified to provide that a quorum of the senate might transact business upon three days' notice.

Refuse to Exempt Phones.

The adoption of the wire resolution came late tonight after a week of stubborn debate and involved parliamentary maneuvering. Before final action was taken the senate voted down amendment after amendment in rapid order.

Senator Watson of Indiana proposed an amendment to exempt telephone wires from public control. The amendment was rejected by a vote of 41 to 20. Another amendment by Senator Watson to exempt press wires was voted down, 39 to 21. Senator Reed of Missouri offered an amendment to prevent any interference with press or private messages unless they contained disloyal language or the government business demanded precedence. This was also rejected by a vote of 33 to 28.

Form of the Grant.

The resolution follows:

"Resolved, That the president, during the continuance of the present war, is authorized and empowered, whenever he shall deem it necessary for the national security or defense, to supervise or to take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable or radio system or systems, or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, which supervision, possession, control, or operation shall not extend beyond the date of the proclamation by the president of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace:

"Provided, That just compensation shall be made for such supervision, possession, control, or operation, to be determined by the president; and if the amount thereof, so determined by the president, is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75% of the amount so determined by the president and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75%, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section twenty-four, paragraph twenty, and section one hundred and forty-five of the judicial code:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the states in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several states, except wherein such laws, powers or regulations may affect the transmission of government communications or the use of stocks and bonds by such system or systems."

Attacks Rail Administration.

In the progress of the debate, before the final vote was taken, Senator Harding of Ohio assailed the railroad administration as an evidence of what the public utilities of the country would come to in the event of government control. The railroads, he said, were being put upon a political instead of a war basis.

"This war time, when we are making failures of many undertakings, is no time to initiate a half-digested plan which will ultimately lead to government ownership," the Ohioan declared.

Senator Reed of Missouri characterized the railroad situation since Director McAdoo took control as "badly mixed."

"We shall never be able to unscramble the railroads," said Senator Reed. "They are now in government control and let us not delude ourselves into thinking they will ever go back to private ownership. They will not. Exactly the same thing applies to the wire control. Once it passes to the government, it will permanently leave private ownership. We are voting for this control for all time.

"I hope that this government control of railroads, wires, and all the rest of it will be removed as far as possible from politics. There is coming a day when another party will be in power. This administration must make sure that it does not allow the early control of all these great public utilities to be governed by any political expediency. It must set up a high standard of control."

Refused Information to Congress.

Senator Wadsworth of New York deplored the fact that, as he put it, the administration had failed to give congress "the slightest reason why wire communication ought to be put in the hands of the government."

"We have passed war legislation here that the president wanted and have been content to do it when the reason was explained to us," Mr. Wadsworth said. "This is the only measure put before us in which we have been asked merely to pass it, without knowing the reason why.

"The secretary of war, the secretary of navy, and the postmaster general appeared before the house committee and failed to give any reason why the resolution should be passed. They assumed the attitude that congress did not need to know, that it was unnecessary for congress to try to inform itself.

Questions the Motive.

"I say there is a mystery surrounding the genesis of this resolution for government control of wire communication. No man in congress has been able to point out any emergency that exists for it, or that may confront the country in the future.

"What, then, is the motive behind it? I want to say to the senate that I believe there are men in high places in our government who are determined that the railroads, taken over in war time, shall be conducted after the war as government property, and who are bound that they shall be politically controlled. They intend that they shall never go back to their private owners.

"The three cabinet officers who appeared before the house committee are avowed proponents of government ownership of public utilities. Mr. Baker, Mr. Daniels and Mr. Burleson all believe in it. The postmaster general in his annual reports has insisted that the wire communication be taken over by the government."

Means Increase in Wages.

Senator Lenroot of Wisconsin told the senate that he had shifted his position within a week with regard to wire control because he was unwilling, while the threat of a strike was being held over the government, to vote, for that reason only, to turn over the telegraph and telephone lines to the government.

"In effect, it has been said to the employés of the telegraph companies," Mr. Lenroot asserted, "when the threat was made to strike, 'If you strike, it will bring about a condition where it will become necessary to take these lines immediately, and if I, the postmaster general, shall be placed in charge of the telegraph wires, I will assure you that you will receive a compensation from 15 to 20 per cent higher than you are now receiving, even though you have no complaint at this time.'"

"Headquarters, American Expeditionary Forces, July 12, 1918.

"Section A—In the Chateau Thierry region a trench raid attempted by the enemy broke down with losses under our fire. Yesterday our aviators shot down a hostile machine in the region of Thiaucourt.

Drive Back German Patrol.

"Section B—In the Chateau Thierry region conditions on the day of July 8 to 9 were normal. A German patrol was driven back with losses by an American patrol in the Belleau region. There was much other patrolling activity on both sides, but there were no incidents, except fire directed from the German front lines on an American patrol.

"In the Chateau Thierry region from July 9 to 10 the German artillery was more than usually active and his infantry nervously alert. His alertness resulted in the use of many flares during the night. His batteries were active in counter battery fire and in harassing fire on our positions in the front and rear. There was short concentration during the evening in the Voie du Chatel region. Some gas, mainly of the sneezing and lachrymatory variety, was used.

Explode Ammunition Dump.

"There was continued intermittent rifle and machine gun fire on our positions in the Vaux area. German airplane and balloon activity was moderate. Patrols on both sides were active, without particular incident.

"Along the Marne July 9 to 10 the activity of our artillery was the only feature of interest. We shelled the enemy positions heavily, drawing only feeble response from his batteries in counter battery harassing and registration fire. German hand grenades thrown from the north bank fell into the river. A moderate number of German air piatrols and a large number of German balloons were used in observation. An amunition dump near Jaulgonne was exploded by our artillery."

"In the Thann sector July 9 there was no unusual occurrence except an increase in the German machine gun and rifle fire.

Munster Sector Quiet.

"The German airplane reported shot down in the American official communique No. 59, section A, was brought down July 11 near Thiaucourt by Lieuts. Jones and Tobin. As a result of their fire the German plane fell in flames.

"In Lorraine July 8 to 9 the enemy showed no particular activity except in machine gun fire. Besides a large number of bursts, his machine guns on several occasions fired continuously on our positions for periods of from ten minutes to half an hour. His artillery fire was light. His airplanes and balloons were constantly in observation. Our anti-aircraft was successful in driving back his airplanes. Our reconnoissance patrols operated successfully.

"The Munster sector was very quiet on July 9. There was no fire from the enemy's artillery. We drove off four of the enemy's planes. Our patrols were active."

CARLTON READY TO TURN JOB OVER TO GOVERNMENT

Denver, Colo., July 13.—Newcomb Carlton stated today that he is prepared to turn over to the government his reins as president of the Western Union Telegraph company. On a tour of inspection here, Carlton said: "Government control is all right with me, if President Wilson wants it.

"Western Union employés need not worry over their jobs under federal operation," he added. "I'm the only one likely to lose my job. It is not the labor question pressing the administration to take over commulcation lines; it is something deeper."

Carlton showed bitterness against Postmaster General Burleson during the interview here. The postoffice department's action in inspiring charges against the company for carrying telegrams on trains was "rotten political play," said Carlton.

FOE SOCIALISTS, EVEN GERMANS, IN MOOD TO TALK

Allies' Aims "Slipped" to Them, and Replies Are Favorable.

NORTHAMPTON, England, July 13.—Arthur Henderson, Labor leader and member of the British war cabinet, speaking today at a Labor conference here, said the British Labor party last month had succeeded in getting its statement of war aims into the hands of the Socialists of enemy countries and that five replies thus far had been received. Mr. Henderson continued:

"The first reply came from the Bulgarian Socialists, who accepted practically all the general points of our memorandum, reserving some unimportant points regarding Macedonia.

"The second reply came from the Hungarian workers, who have submitted to the Stockholm committee a statement of policy much on the lines of our memorandum.

Reply from Austria.

"The third reply came from the Austrian Socialists, who accepted the principles of the interallied memorandum as a basis for discussion. They indorsed our conception of a federal system for Austria-Hungary and a similar system for the Balkan states.

"They declared they had always repudiated the Brest-Litovsk peace treaty and they agreed that Alsace-Lorraine and Italian, Polish, and colonial questions must be solved in accordance with the desires of the peoples concerned.

"The fourth reply came from the German minority Socialists, who submitted a statement to the Stockholm committee on the lines of the interallied memorandum.

Favorable Hint from Germany.

"The fifth, and the most significant, reply came from the German majority Socialists, who endeavored to send it by Troelstra, but the action of the allies in refusing passports to Troelstra prevented the written document from reaching us. Nevertheless we received a summary which shows that the German majority Socialists declared their willingness to take part in an international conversation on the basis of the proposals made by the neutral Socialists.

"It also seems clear that the German majority Socialists accept virtually all the principles of the inter-allied memorandum. They are ready to discuss even the question of the responsibility for the war, although they think that no good purpose would be served thereby.

For League of Nations.

"They are ready to discuss Belgium and Alsace-Lorraine and believe that an amicable solution can be found. They agree to a complete restoration of Belgian independence. They urge that an international conference would be very useful at this time, and, finally they declare themselves in favor of a league of nations to prevent aggression by one power upon another."

ATHLETES TO GIVE PICNIC.

The annual outing and picnic of the Dodger-Training Athletic association will be held at Dunes park, along the Indiana shores of Lake Michigan, today. The picnic participants will gather at Kedzie and Twelfth streets at 8 o'clock this morning to make the trip.

DELAY OF DRIVE GIVES SURPRISE, BUT IS WELCOME

Allies Knew Kaiser Had Planned Attack in Big Force.

BY EDWIN L. JAMES.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable. [Copyright: 1918.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY, July 13.—There is one topic of conversation and speculation all along the allied line and it is this: What has happened to the German drive?

On all lines every one seeks a reason for the delay. Has the Boche found out that the allies had plans that have balked his contemplated efforts? Has he got troubles of a serious nature in his own camp? Is he planning a bigger show that takes more time than expected?

It can be stated that the delay is a surprise to the allied armies and not an unwelcome one. The German high command is fighting against time, time when America will be a telling military factor, and if to be a better guesser causes weeks of delay in Boche plans, the allied commanders are willing to let him have the reputation of being a better guesser.

Know Attack Was Planned.

A week ago, speaking frankly, it was the consensus of allied opinion that another German drive was at hand. This opinion was based on good evidence, supported by indisputable captured documents. It was thought that the Germans would attack between July 6 and 13, and there also was concrete evidence that plans were made for one attack against the French in Champagne and another against the British near Amiens.

It was also definitely known that forty-four crack German assault divisions used by the kaiser in the Somme and Aisne attacks had completed a period of training in the area back of the German lines. Now why the change in German plans which has led to delay?

Evidence recently obtained proves beyond a shadow of doubt that the German high command is having trouble with the morale of a large part of the German troops. Another opinion is that Gen. von Hindenburg understood that Gen. Foch had made plans to counteract his expected drive and therefore had to alter his plans until he could make another guess at a weak spot.

Delay Means Bigger Effort.

But the opinion which is guiding allied conduct is that, instead of attacking with forty-four divisions which formed the mass of maneuver in the Somme and Aisne attacks, Hindenburg is taking more time to prepare a larger driving force.

It is giving no information to Hindenburg to say that upon the last theory the plans of the allies are being made. It can be stated that the delay in the German drive is causing no consternation among allied commanders. Perhaps it might be said it has had the opposite effect.

Last March Germany's military leaders definitely adopted a program to try to win the war this year in order not to have to face the large armies America will have trained and equipped in the field next spring. The kaiser's program called for speedy and effective campaigns this summer up to the middle of November, conducted with the utmost vigor up to the point of the exhaustion of his forces.

Expected Four More Efforts.

Leaving the date at which cool weather will hamper the military operations at Nov. 15, it was estimated after the Aisne drive that the allies would have to face four more drives before that time. This on the supposition that the German military machine is capable of making one drive monthly.

If the present delay means it cannot make a drive a month, it is probable that the allies would have only three more drives to halt. That would be one drive this month, the big drive in August, and then one more.

Every delay means many more trained American troops to help the French and British hold the Germans, and thus makes it more sure that the Germans will not win the war this year. The opinion generally held is that if the kaiser cannot win the war by November he will make a strong bid for peace.

Silk Manufacturer Held as Possible German Spy

New York, July 13.—The secret arrest on June 10 of W. L. Wirbelauer, a silk manufacturer of Paterson, N. J., was disclosed by the federal authorities here today with announcement that a grand jury investigation is to be held next week of an alleged German plot to spy on British fleet bases in England in order to aid submarine attacks.

BATTLE STATEMENTS

PARIS REPORT

PARIS, July 13.—We carried out this morning a local action north and east of Longpont, advancing our positions in an eastern direction, and, notwithstanding the enemy resistance, we crossed the Savieres, opposite Catifet farm. About thirty prisoners fell into our hands.

The number of prisoners captured by us yesterday in the region of Montdidier is more than 600. We took, in addition, more than eighty machine guns.

Between Montdidier and the Oise the French in the course of the night advanced their forward posts 500 meters in the region of the Porte farm.

Several raids were carried out by French troops north of the Avre (southeast of Amiens), in the region of the Oise, on the Marne, and in the Champagne, resulting in the taking of prisoners.

BERLIN REPORT

BERLIN, via London, July 13.—Southwest of Bailleul attacks by strong British detachments were repulsed on frequent occasions. In the same way enemy thrusts launched during the night north of Albert broke down.

Violent artillery duels on the west bank of the Avre were followed by French partial attacks between Castel and Mailly. The enemy, after violent artillery preparation, repeated these attacks in the afternoon near Mailly, and in the evening along the battle sector, and obtained possession of Castel and the Anchin farm. East of this line his attacks broke down under our counter attacks.

Between the Oise and the Marne fighting activity continued lively. Renewed attacks by the enemy north of Longpont and south of the Ourcq were repulsed.

Fighting activity has been revived in the middle Vosges and Hartmannsweilerkopf.

Northeast of Pont-a-Mousson and the Fave region attacks launched by the enemy during the night broke down.

LONDON REPORT.

LONDON, July 13.—Yesterday English and Australian troops again carried out successful minor enterprises in the neighborhood of Vieux, Berquin and Merris, capturing eighty-six prisoners and a few machine guns. Our casualties in the operations of the past two days in this sector have been exceptionally light.

During the night a party of English troops raided the German trenches north of Hamel and brought back twenty-two prisoners.

A raid attempted by the enemy north of Meteren was repulsed.

The hostile artillery has been active opposite Beaumont Hamel and in the Strazeele and Loore sectors.

A few prisoners were captured last night by one of our patrols in the neighborhood of Boyelles. A raid attempted by the enemy this morning south of Bucquoy was repulsed. The hostile artillery has shown some activity during the day south of Arras.

ROME REPORT

ROME, July 13.—Yesterday afternoon large enemy detachments began to attack our position on the Cornone slopes. Our garrison attacked the enemy with bayonet, driving him back to his trenches. Numerous dead were left behind the lines, sixty-six men were taken prisoner, and four machine guns were captured.

On the remainder of the front the fighting was moderate. At the Pasubio both artilleries were active. Enemy reconnaissances in the Frenzela and Brenta valleys were checked. Ten hostile airplanes were brought down.

VIENNA REPORT

VIENNA [via London], July 13.—Reconnoitering engagements have taken place on the Venetian mountain front.

PRAISE GIVEN TO HIS TROOPS BY PERSHING

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, July 13.—American troops have borne themselves with fine valor in "all the drastic tests of modern warfare," Gen. Pershing declared today in a general order.

The order expresses "appreciation of the splendid courage, service, and sacrifice of the officers and men of the First and Second divisions in the recent operations in which the enemy was stopped.

"These divisions," the order adds, "submitting fully for the first time to all the drastic tests of modern warfare, bore themselves with fine valor that brought from their allied comrades many expressions of appreciation."

Rain Holds Up Fighting.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, July 13.—[By the Associated Press.]—On the fronts in the Marne district held by American troops, last night was the quietest of any since the Germans in their sweep southward were stopped at the north bank of the river. In some sections not a single German shell came over, while in others the artillery fire was far below normal.

It has rained every day for the last four days in this region, with the result that the fields and roads are sticky and wet and unfavorable for marching or fighting. This fact may have had something to do with holding back the expected German offensive.

It is considered possible that even with the bad conditions under foot the enemy may launch his attack at any moment.

NEW EPIDEMIC IN GERMANY DUE TO LACK OF FOOD

AMSTERDAM, July 13.—The illness from which thousands of persons in German industrial districts are suffering and which has been described as Spanish influenza is really an illness due to hunger and consequent exhaustion, the Telegraaf says it has learned.

In various industrial towns in Westphalia and the Rhine provinces, the newspaper reports, many deaths are occurring daily and the hospitals are full of patients.

The German potato ration, the newspaper adds, has been reduced to between three and four pounds weekly per person and the new potato crop has not yet been distributed.

JUDSON AND POST HAVE SAILED ON RELIEF MISSION

An Atlantic Port, July 13.—Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, head of the American commission for relief in Persia, accompanied by two members of the commission, Dr. Wilber E. Post of Chicago and Maurice Wertheim of New York, have sailed for England, where they will spend a week in consultation with British officials before joining the members of the commission who have proceeded to the Persian gulf.

The purpose of the commission to Persia is to coöperate with and strengthen the group of workers who have been in the field for two years, and to study conditions and help alleviate the suffering.

The American committee has already cabled $2,271,570. The commission goes out supplied with grain for planting, motor trucks for transportation of food from the harvest fields of India, and medical supplies.

CROZIER AND SHARPE NAMED LINE GENERALS

Washington, D. C., July 13.—[Special.]—Maj. Gens. William Crozier and Henry G. Sharpe, who have been the storm center of attack for munitions and supplies unpreparedness since the United States entered the war, were relieved of all connection with the ordnance and quartermaster departments when the president sent to the senate the nominations of new chiefs of these departments today.

Brig. Gen. Clarence C. Williams was nominated as chief of ordnance for a four a year term, with rank of major general.

Brig. Gen. Harry L. Rogers, ranking officer of the quartermaster department, and at present chief quartermaster with the American forces in France, was named quartermaster general.

Gens. Crozier and Sharpe were nominated for the rank of major general of the line, filling two added major generalships created in the new army bill.

SLACKERS' NET DRAWS AGAIN; 1,135 DETAINED

16,000 Have Been Questioned; Comparatively Few Shirkers.

Estimates given out by the federal authorities and police last night indicated that 1,135 suspects are being detained under the order to seek out all slackers.

More than 4,000 men were taken yesterday from the streets, places of amusement, manufacturing plants and other places. The total of men taken into custody is estimated in round numbers at 16,000. The number of actual slackers is regarded as comparatively small.

In addition to the hunt for slackers, the federal agents coöperated with agents of the British-Canadian recruiting mission in a roundup of fake "heroes," men illegally wearing uniforms of the allies. A number of these were found and jailed.

Repeat at Cubs' Park.

A swarm of American Protective league operatives and police searched the Cubs' baseball park at the conclusion of the game, repeating the raid of Thursday. The search was methodically carried out and but few taken. As each section heard from a megaphone man the request to make ready for the investigation there was loud cheering. Men of draft age carried their cards in plain view and were passed without inconvenience. All the exits to the park were used and the sifting process quickly carried out.

More than 600 men were taken from the plant of the Crane company at Forty-first street and Kedzie avenue to the Brighton Park station and examined. Fewer than 150 were detained for want of proper identification. Seventy-five federal agents and police participated in this raid.

Pier as Detention Camp.

The municipal pier was called into service as a detention camp, more than 300 men being held there last night. Most of these were out of town men who were held bending communication with their home draft boards.

The regular evening dance was in progress, street cars bringing loads of young women and their escorts. Each street car was greeted by a contingent of jackies and soldiers, and all men of draft age were called upon for their cards. Not more than twenty-five were found without credentials. These gave the uniform excuse of having left their cards in their "other clothes."

Police and Jackie Guard.

Forty policemen and a sprinkling of jackies and soldiers were detailed for duty on the pier. Suspects were sent there from other detention points about the city where overcrowding was threatened.

A detachment of police and operatives surrounded the tent of the Barnum & Bailey circus on the White City grounds and passed all the spectators through the sifting process. A considerable contingent of suspects was weeded out.

Loop Sees Its Humor.

In the loop there was the titter of excitement all day. On all corners were stationed operatives, police, and soldiers and sailors. These halted all pedestrians of draft age, boarded all street cars, and stopped automobiles. Pool halls in the downtown district were constantly visited in the hunt for men without identification. Numerous arrests were made about the Madison street motion picture theaters and hotels.

At all corners automobiles were kept in waiting to transport prospective suspects to police stations or to the State Council of Defense building. In one case a "rubber neck wagon," having a capacity of seventy-five, was requisitioned, doing noble service throughout the day.

The amusement parks constantly were patrolled by operatives and police, many young men who claimed to have forgotten their cards in the excitement of changing clothes for the Saturday night revel being compelled to undergo detention until they could telephone home for aid.

Draft Boards Ever Ready.

Draft boards have been operating on the twenty-four hour plan since Friday. Many of the draft officials have gone without sleep in the effort to help out those caught in the unfortunate situation of being improperly identified.

Large numbers of the suspects have been turned over to the boards with the result that the induction process has been applied where the suspects considered it not worth while to worry about identification.

Nicholas Nickolovitch fled when operatives approached him in the stockyards district and took refuge under a bridge near Forty-third and Morgan streets. He removed his overalls and slung himself to the underside of the bridge. Later in the day he was found on the ground, whither he had dropped from the span when his overalls gave way. He had suffered a fractured leg and a broken nose.

Two deserters were disclosed among the men taken into the Central station. Frank Maleska, who declined to have anything to do with the government, was turned over to the federal bureau.

TOYLAND LEGION MAKES JANITOR CRY "KAMERAD"

Sheridan Road Kiddies Win Their Battle for Right to Play.

The Toyland Legion of Sheridan road and Buena Park terrace, with American flags flying and baby hands beating a prize package drum, took a Sheridan road sector last night and the dew fell with them in control of the battlefield—a grassy court. When the sandman took over sentry duty for the night and they bivouacked in their trundle beds, the "enemy" pulled down his flag and admitted defeat.

Ten mothers and double that number of youngsters first met the "enemy" in the person of one "Frank," the janitor, who has the care of the apartment building that houses these virile Americans at 4300-12 Sheridan road.

Violates Monroe Doctrine.

"Frank," according to the ten proud and patriotic mothers, announced on Friday that no children would be permitted to play or foregather in the court, an inviting grassy yard. This was interpreted as the news was flashed through the building from tenant to tenant that the youngsters could not use the lawn to play upon. It violated the Monroe Doctrine—"Keep off the grass."

But to these mothers it also became an overt act. With the diplomacy of statesmen they called for an explanation and a rescinding of the order.

A committee was selected to call upon O. P. Curran Jr., 4531 Broadway, renting agent for the building. Mr. Curran was not in. R. A. Garno, office manager, by way of establishing a truce between his firm and the committee, announced that complaint had been received from one of their own neighbors. Who? Which? What? Why, Mr. Eugene A. Bolmar. Mr. Bolmar lives in the apartment entering at 4306 Sheridan road. The committee failed to be pacified by Mr. Garno's information. They promptly journeyed home. A council of war was called. The result:

Serve Round Robin.

Yesterday bright and early a round robin was served upon Mr. Bolmar. The contents were kept a dark secret, but it bespoke no neighborly spirit. Among those mothers voicing their displeasure and announcing war on "that person" were Mrs. A. E. Glover Jr., Mrs. C. M. Clenny, Mrs. Lester Colby, Mrs. W. E. Amberg and Mrs. William G. Brooks.

Mr. Bolmar last night denied he had protested against the children playing in the court. He also denied sending the letter which was exhibited by Mr. Garno. "Why, I know nothing of it. Let them play all they want and anywhere," he announced.

Knows Nothing About It.

Mr. Curran declared he had just returned to the city and knew nothing about the matter until apprised of it by Mr. Bolmar. He expressed his regret that the letter had been made public. He said: "As to the children, they have got to be out. And children have got to play. Our leases have nothing to do with the rights of children. Play, play, and as long as they want. I hope this ends it."

And last night when one mother telephoned THE TRIBUNE and with a hesitating voice asked, "What did they do about it," and she was informed they could play, she said, "O, thanks. That's just fine."

RADIO TO CARRY NEWS TO ARMY

New York, July 13.—Arrangements to distribute neighborhood news to all of the American fighting forces abroad have been perfected by the foreign press cable service bureau of the committee on public information, which is directed by Walter S. Rogers.

This new feature, designed to give to American soldiers such news as they might expect to receive in letters from their relatives and friends if the mails could be depended upon, will be edited by Herman Suter, a newspaper publisher.

LATE RISING GOOD FOR YOU.

The sage observation that "It's nice to get up in the morning, but it's nicer to lie in bed," is no longer a shameful confession of laziness. The British minister of munitions investigating the health and efficiency of its workers found that too early rising is harmful.

CLAIM KAISER'S ANGER KILLED VON HINDENBURG

Holland Papers Say He Died After Row on Paris Drive.

[Since yesterday morning there has been no confirmation or further report on the rumor of Hindenburg's death.]

AMSTERDAM, July 13.—[By Associated Press.]—Field Marshal von Hindenburg is dead, according to the newspaper Les Nouvelles. His death is said to have occurred after a stormy interview with the German emperor at great headquarters, at Spa. The emperor and the field marshal are declared to have had serious differences of opinion concerning the German offensive toward Paris. The field marshal died from congestion of the brain.

The violent interview between Von Hindenburg and Emperor William occurred on May 16, Les Nouvelles says. It was followed by an apoplectic stroke which ultimately resulted in the field marshal's death.

The newspaper says its information was obtained "from good sources in the occupied district of Belgium."

LUDENDORFF COMMANDS.

In the last six months there have been several rumors of the death of Field Marshal von Hindenburg, and there have been many reports that he has been in poor health.

ALBANIA DRIVE IS CONTINUED; ALLIES GAINING

Austrian Loss Heavy as They Retreat Before Attack.

PARIS, July 13.—The allies continue to drive the Austrians back in Albania. The official report, issued by the ministry of war tonight, said:

"In Albania the enemy has retreated on an organized line delimited by Pashtani, Selchani, hill 500, the confluence of the Tomorica and the Devoli and Kurshova. The number of prisoners taken by our troops has increased to 470. The enemy suffered heavy losses during his retreat."

Fighting in Macedonia.

The official report dealing with operations in Macedonia says:

"There were patrol encounters on the Struma, where Greek troops dispersed a Bulgarian detachment, and at the Cerna bend.

"Artillery activity was displayed by both sides in the neighborhood of Doiran, east of the Vardar and in the region of the lakes.

"In the course of aerial engagements an enemy airplane was forced by the British to land near Doiran."

Rome Reports on Gains.

ROME, July 13.—Fighting continues in Albania, where the Italians are maintaining contact with the Austrians on the new line north of the Semeni river, the war office announced today.

"In Albania we maintained contact with the enemy's new line north of the Semeni," the statement said. "On the lower Devoli retreating enemy columns were attacked and dispersed Thursday night.

"Since July 6 we have taken more than 1,800 prisoners, including sixty-one officers."

FRENCH DRIVE LINES ACROSS SAVIERES RIVER

Advances Are Made at Several Points Along the Line.

PARIS, July 13.—Further progress is reported in the war office's announcment tonight, an operation in the neighborhood of Longpont enabling the French to cross the Savieres river opposite Catifet farm.

In an operation carried out last night on the front between Montdidier and the Oise the French pushed their advanced posts forward a distance of approximately 500 yards in the vicinity of the Porte farm.

How Plateau Was Won.

ON THE FRENCH FRONT IN FRANCE, Friday, July 12.—[By the Associated Press.]—The superbly executed local action carried out by the French today southeast of Amiens not only gave them a large batch of prisoners but also brought into their possession the entire Rouvrelles plateau, dominating the region between the River Avre and Moreuil, and Roye, through which the main railroad from Paris to Amiens passes and which has been in the hands of the enemy since March.

More than 500 German officers and men already captured have been sent to the rear and others are arriving.

The artillery preparation preceding the attack was brief, but it was of a powerful character and the aim of the gunners was so accurate that when the infantry went over they found the trees in the small woods abounding in this vicinity reduced to matchwood.

Held Up by Barbed Wire.

The Germans had laid a widespread network of barbed wire in these woods and the shells had blown the wire into a great tangle, making the progress of the attackers difficult. The French troops, however, overcame the almost impassable obstacles by gallant perseverance while under the incessant fire of hundreds of machine guns.

The assault began early in the morning and lasted three hours. The Frenchmen advanced at some places to a depth of 2,000 yards along a front extending for nearly five miles. The village of Castel first fell before the dashing attack. Anchin farm next succumbed and Groshetere wood and Brouettes wood followed. Then Billot wood was captured. All these positions were taken despite the most determined opposition of the enemy, who seemed firmly decided to hold the positions at all costs.

The Germans suffered heavily in dead and wounded in addition to prisoners, while material and machine guns were captured in considerable quantities.

ITALY REDUCES CADORNA, TWO OTHER LEADERS

ROME, July 13.—A military bulletin decrees the retirement, with loss of rank and pay, of Gens. Cadorna, Parro, and Capello. Gen. Diaz, commander in chief of the Italian armies, has been decorated with the grand cordon of the Military Order of Savoy. Gen. Cadorna was commander in chief of the Italian armies last year when the Austro-German drive forced them back.

LONDONHOSPITAL CORPS BUSY WITH WOUNDED YANKS

Many Come from British Front with Sons of Empire.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LONDON, July 13.—American wounded are now arriving in London in considerable numbers from the sections of France where the Americans are brigaded with the British. They reach the various main line stations on British hospital trains, together with the hundreds of British wounded with which the trains are laden.

The American soldiers already are receiving the best of care and are being visited by American women members of a committee formed to look after them as soon as the hospital authorities give their permission. Most of the American cases arriving in London are classified as serious. About one-fourth of the men received their wounds while in the fighting line, the remainder being accidents or sick cases. In the latter category are a number of men with pneumonia or appendicitis.

At each station British ambulances take away the men as they are detrained.

Permitted to Smoke.

The soldiers are often given cigarets when they detrain and are permitted to smoke as they lie on the ambulance stretchers for a ride of one to four miles to the hospitals.

The pedestrian catches a glimpse of the ambulance, and during the last few evenings it has been often possible to see American soldiers lying at the side of English, Australian, and Canadian Tommies, all cheerfully smoking cigarets.

Reported to Red Cross.

As soon as the American patients reach the hospital their arrival is reported to the American army medical service and the American Red Cross.

It is expected that as soon as the American authorities take over the two London hospitals which the American Red Cross recently announced were to be used exclusively for American wounded most of these men will be transferred to a hospital which has a staff of American doctors and nurses. Two new American hospitals located in the London suburbs will be taken over within a fortnight.

At the British front, the American troops, tucked away in their machine gun nests, gun pits, and trenches, have been paying much more attention to fighting the rainy weather than to battling with the German.

INTERVENTION IN RUSSIA BY U. S., SENATE DEMAND

Score Bolsheviki Chiefs as Traitors; Oppose Plan to Aid Them.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., July 13.—[Special.]—Insistent demands for intervention in Russia were voiced in the senate today along with bitter condemnation of the Bolshevik government. The debate came to an abrupt end, however, without action.

Senator Borah of Idaho precipitated the discussion by delivering a prepared speech on Bastille day, in which he declared that America would "fail in what is perhaps the supremest task of the war" if it stood aside in the Russian situation.

Senator Poindexter of Washington sharply criticised the administration for not deciding upon a definite Russian policy. He took occasion to denounce the policy urged by Raymond Robins of Illinois, who has been in Russia recently as a member of the Red Cross mission. Mr. Robins, he said, favored the support of the Bolshevik government.

Russian and French Revolts.

A military decision on the western front is the only way to bring about a solution of the Russian situation, Senator Nelson of Minnesota declared.

Senator Borah compared certain phases of the French revolution with the present Russian revolution. He said that there were many things about both which justified the most severe condemnation, but that the fundamental purposes of the two were, in many respects, similar.

"The whole vast movement which we celebrate today, the fall of the Bastille, seemed at one time but an exhibition of human depravity and misery," Senator Borah said. "Just so in the Russian revolution. There are despicable creatures, corrupted slaves, bold and persistent traitors, but behind all of these is a great, noble people, struggling to be free, struggling in madness and undiscipline to be rid of that bureaucratic hell in which they have been tortured for centuries. Let us not in our wrath against individuals or isolated incidents lose sight of the great principles involved, or lose faith in the great cause going forward or lose interest in the struggle of this great, brave people.

Entitled to Unselfish Help.

"Trotzky is an incident. Lenine is of no concern in the final adjustment of things. But the Russian people are of supreme concern and entitled to the sympathy, the counsel, and confidence of free peoples everywhere. They are entitled especially to the help and guidance, the unselfish and beneficent leadership of this republic.

"Let us not stand about as the nations did in 1789 criticizing and anathematizing the French revolution. Let us have faith in humanity, and the cause of freedom as such and go in every way possible to the aid of Russia. Let no man or class of men, no prejudices or passions come between us and our duty to the Russian people.

"While we commemorate things which history records and mark anew the milestones of human progress and human liberty, let us take our part in the great events of the present hour. To stand aside while Russia is making this struggle, to offer neither aid, nor counsel, nor advice, is to fail in what is perhaps the supremest task of the war."

Condemns Recognition of Soviets.

Senator Thomas of Colorado suggested the danger of racial conflict by intervention. Senator Borah promptly replied:

"Nothing I have said should be construed as an indorsement of sending Japanese troops into Russia."

Senator Poindexter of Washington bitterly condemned all proposals to recognize and support the soviets' government in Russia. He declared that this idea had been suggested by Raymond Robins of Illinois, who has been in Russia recently as a member of the Red Cross mission.

Scores Robins' Views.

"Mr. Robins and other gentlemen who were associated with him in Russia, one of them a prominent copper mining man from Montana, are apologists and defenders of the present Bolshevik régime in Russia," Senator Poindexter said. "It seems to me that when that statement is made that is enough. The interest of the United States in the government of Russia, aside from our general humane interest in the welfare of any people, is in the part which Russia, with its almost unlimited resources of material and men, shall take in this war. Our interest in the question is what influence will this great power, unorganized and undeveloped, of men and metal and food, have upon the German army which is now attacking with all its force the organized forces of civilization in France.

"The gentleman (Mr. Robins) referred to makes the astounding proposition, in the face of this crisis on the battle front of France, to divert a part of the man power and of the supplies and resources of the country and send them to the Bolshevik government of Russia to be used under their leadership and direction.

Opposes Friendship for Traitors.

"That is the proposition which I am sorry to say, judging from intimations and from circumstances which sometimes have the conclusive effects of proof, has made considerable impression upon the administration.

"We have been taught from infancy to condemn and to despise Benedict Arnold, but Benedict Arnold's treason and conduct were on a high plane compared with the contemptible and infamous motives of Lenine and Trotzky in their betrayal of the Russian people and the allies. This gentleman would have the U. S. A. turn its kick upon the principle of fair dealing and honesty and faith and loyalty to their country and to their allies and make friends with and give aid and comfort to the traitors who have sold them out."

Criticizes Lack of Decision.

Senator Lewis said that he could assure the senate that the present administration was doing everything in its power to obtain information on Russian conditions and to render the most effective aid to the Russian people. Senator Poindexter promptly criticized the administration for spending too much time obtaining information without making a decision.

"MUST DESTROY GOD OF BRUTE FORCE"

course of his speech before the reichstag main committee Thursday.

"The present possession of Belgium only means that we have a pawn for future negotiations," the chancellor said. "We have no intention to keep Belgium in any form whatever."

A German official telegram explains the use of the word "pawn" as follows:

"By the expression 'pawn' is meant that one does not intend to keep what one has in one's hand, as a pawn, if negotiations bring a favorable result.

Want "Friendly Relations."

"What we precisely want, as expressed by us on Feb. 24," the chancellor continued, "is that after the war restored Belgium shall as a self-dependent state not be subject to anybody as a vassal and shall live with us in good friendly relations.

"I have held this point of view from the beginning in regard to Belgium and I still hold it today. This side of my policy is fully in conformity with the general lines, the direction of which I yesterday clearly laid before you.

Says War Is Defense.

"We are waging the war as a war of defense, as we have done from the very beginning, and every imperialistic tendency and every tendency to world domination has been remote from our minds.

"What we want is the inviolability of our territory, open air for the expansion of our people in the economic domain and, naturally, also security in regard to the future. This is completely in conformity with my point of view in regard to Belgium, but how this point of view can be established in detail depends upon future negotiations, and on this point I am unable to give binding declarations."

Much of Speech Confidential.

Before Count von Hertling delivered his address Herr von Payer, the vice chancellor, said that a portion of the chancellor's statement would be confidential. Such parts of it as he declared to be confidential should be treated as such, Herr von Payer insisted, and not get into the press as on former occasions. The main committee gave its consent to this.

After the chancellor's speech a general discussion took place. Deputy Fischbeck, a progressive, said that it must be made clear that the resignation of Dr. von Kuehlmann as foreign secretary was not the result of pan-German intrigues and that the appointment of his successor was not made at the request of those circles and not in the furtherance of their policy.

The deputy said that the chancellor's announcement of adherence to his policy was satisfactory and that if he carried out the promises he had made on this occasion he, as well as the new foreign secretary, Admiral von Hintze, would have the support of the progressives.

Kuehlmann Is Denounced.

Count von Westarp, Conservative member of the reichstag, said:

"The reasons given for Foreign Secretary von Kuehlmann's retirement were decisive. The unfavorable effect of his speech was created more from what he refrained from saying than by what he said. Now, as before, I cannot approve of the chancellor's internal policy. The reply to the papal note was only a diplomatic act, and had no place in the government's program.

"Of course, we must all respond to every serious suggestion of peace negotiations, but considerable reserve in expressing readiness for them certainly would be expedient."

Count von Westarp denied that he and his friends had boomed the candidacy of Admiral von Hintze to succeed Von Kuehlmann, and said:

"We have no prejudice, either good or bad, with regard to the state secretary, and we shall await his policy. It is desirable that Admiral von Hintze should have the closest coöperation with the supreme army command, a point on which the chancellor lays such emphasis."

Protest by Scheidemann.

Adolf Groeber, one of the center leaders in the reichstag, said:

"Serious peace proposals from the enemy must be seriously examined. We cannot, however, again and again manifest our readiness for peace and announce our conditions in detail and from our side only."

Philip Scheidemann, Socialist leader, said:

"Foreign Secretary von Kuehlmann's resignation had the worst possible effect at home and abroad and it shows itself to be a victory of 'conquest and power' politicians. His speech had a bad effect on those who do not want peace by understanding. It also displeased the supreme army command."

Reichstag Not Consulted.

Herr Scheidemann complained that the reichstag was not consulted over the change in the foreign office, and concluded:

"We miss unambiguous statements regarding the home and foreign policy."

After voting the new war loan the reichstag adjourned for the summer recess. The Independent Socialists dissented from the proposal to vote the loan and the Polish deputies abstained from voting.

Secrecy in the Reports.

LONDON, July 13.—Contradiction of policy among German officials seemingly has another illustration in the manner of the publication of the statement made by Count von Hertling, the German imperial chancellor, regarding Belgium.

The German wireless service yesterday put out a long report of Chancellor von Hertling's speech, which ignored all reference to Belgium. It gave a full report of the chancellor's discussion of Russia, and continued:

"In connection with this point the imperial chancellor passed in review the political situation in the west."

The natural inference seems to be that whatever officials issued the wireless version they did not want Count von Hertling's statements regarding the west circulated.

The passages in Chancellor Von Hertling's speech dealing with Belgium which were telegraphed to Copenhagen apparently were issued by some other official than the one controlling the wireless service. Otherwise it would naturally have been put forth through the same medium.

AMERICA GIVES NO FAITH.

Washington, D. C., July 13.—[Special.]—Germany's tentative bid for peace, made in the speech of Count Von Hertling, the German imperial chancellor, before the reichstag main committee on Thursday, will bring no sympathetic response from the United States, and this means that the nations at war with the central powers will adopt the same attitude.

It was obvious from what was said in informed official circles today that no German peace bid will be considered until it is made formally along definite lines that have been laid down on several occasions by President Wilson and the spokesmen for the entente allies.

Here in Washington the Von Hertling bid is regarded as entirely too thin for any consideration whatever. In effect it amounts to a suggestion to the allies to have a small group of representatives meet around the peace table with representatives of the central powers and talk things over.

Try to Muddy Waters.

The imperial chancellor's assurances of restoring Belgium and his statement that Germany stood by her peace views outlined in the imperial response to Pope Benedict's move for an ending of hostilities have not tempted this government to nibble at the German bait to see what its substance is.

Outside of the intense desire of the German government to negotiate a peace now, when the German arms have reached their ascendency and internal conditions in the kaiser's domains are far from satisfactory, the chancellor's bid for peace negotiations represents to Washington nothing more genuine than a fervent if forlorn hope that allied public sentiment will respond in a way that will require the allied governments to consider the indefinite proposals advanced. In other words, the chancellor is seeking to muddy the allied waters.

NEW SIBERIAN REPUBLIC ASKS AID OF CZECHS

British Land More Men; Japan Volunteers Are Helping Slavs.

PEKING, Monday, July 8.—[By the Associated Press.] — Czecho-Slovak forces which captured Nikolsk, northwest of Vladivostok, are now closely pursuing the Bolshevik troops, which are retreating toward Khabarovsk. The Czecho-Slovaks are receiving assistance from a force of 1,500 Cossacks and a number of Chinese and Japanese volunteers. Railway and telegraph communications have been opened with Vladivostok.

Seeks Alliance with Czechs.

HARBIN, Manchuria, Monday, July 8.—[By the Associated Press.]—Czecho-Slovak forces have defeated the Russian Bolsheviki near Chita, a town on the Trans-Siberian railway in the center of Trans-Baikalia.

Gen. Horvath and other members of the Siberian government left Harbin today for Nikolsk to open negotiations for an alliance with the Czecho-Slovaks.

"Allies Split Up Bolsheviki."

MOSCOW, Russia, July 13.—Speaking before the all Russian congress of soviets, Leon Trotzky, minister of war, said the unity of the soviets had suffered as a result of Anglo-French propaganda and part of the Bolshevik force had deserted to the enemy.

Disarm Bolsheviki at Murman.

COPENHAGEN, July 13.—A few days ago, the Tidens Tegn says it learns from Vardoe, 2,000 Russian Bolshevik troops arrived at Murman, on the Arctic coast. Counter-revolutionaries knew of the intended arrival of the Bolsheviki and surrounded and disarmed them. Later the Russian government soldiers were allowed to return to Moscow.

MORE BRITISH ENTER SIBERIA.

Washington, D. C., July 13.—News of the dispatch of British reinforcements to Siberia to support the Czecho-Slovaks and Russians controlling Vladivostok and a long stretch of the trans-Siberian railroad, was received here today through official channels.

Apparently whatever may come of plans for allied and American military intervention in Russia on a great scale, the hard fighting Czecho-Slovaks are to be given by the allies the aid necessary to prevent them from being crushed by Bolshevik forces operating with released German prisoners.

Just what British forces have been dispatched is not known here, nor is it clear whether the movement is part of a general plan of action determined upon in the absence of American approval and coöperation in an intervention program. British, American and Japanese marines and bluejackets already are ashore at Vladivostok guarding war stores.

Wilson Holds to "Peace Plan."

There was nothing today to indicate that President Wilson had changed his view that a military expedition to Siberia could not be undertaken without weakening the front in Europe. Until he is satisfied on this point, he is expected to commit the United States to nothing beyond the extensive plan for protected economic aid for Russia which already is taking shape. Final decision to put this scheme into operation is said to have been what officials meant last week when they said the period of waiting was over.

From other sources today came reports of constant guerrilla fighting in the Ukraine between large bands of peasants and the German military forces. The results were not reported, but it was said the peasants are well equipped with machine guns, rifles, and ammunition.

It is believed that the peasants obtained their military equipment from the stores left by the various armies which retreated after operations in that part of Russia.

Demand Alliance with Entente.

Official dispatches today also brought a remarkable appeal addressed by the delegates of the works and factories of Petrograd to the workmen of Moscow and all Russia declaring that the life of the working classes has become intolerable and proclaiming the Russian workmen will never recognize the alliance concluded with Germany.

"There is no bread, only gunpowder for the famishing people," tragically reads the appeal. "Our interests demand a military compact with the allies' people after we have resuscitated the Russian republic."

Horvath to Aid Allies.

LONDON, July 13.—The allied powers will have the full support of the new Siberian government, according to assurances sent by Lieut. Gen. Horvath, who has been proclaimed provisional ruler of Siberia, to the correspondent of the Daily Mail at Harbin. From his headquarters at Progranitsa, in eastern Manchuria, Gen. Horvath has telegraphed the Mail correspondent as follows:

"Paragraph 5 of the program of my government, which establishes the renewal of all treaties with the allied powers, is at once confirmation of the firm intention on our part to act in complete accord with our brave allies and to return to the Russian ranks those who are fighting with the enemy."

COUNT MIRBACH ASSASSIN KNOWN

AMSTERDAM, July 13.—The assassination of Count von Mirbach, the German ambassador at Moscow, was ordered by the executive of the social revolutionaries of the left and was carried out in person by one of the party's confidential agents, says a Kiev dispatch to the Rheinische Westfaelische Zeitung of Essen. This agent, whose name is known, the correspondent declares, wrote the documents which gained the assassin's entrance to Von Mirbach's quarters.

Uncle Sam Says Ticket Scalpers Owe Him $75,000

Uncle Sam and the ticket scalpers of Chicago seem near to a break again. Uncle Sam has figured out that the curbstone peddlers of theater tickets owe him something like $75,000. The venders, who belong to a closeknit organization, are willing to concede, say, $20,000.

MEMORIAL FOR SLAIN AVIATOR

A memorial service for MacMillan Weddell of the United States naval aviation service, who was killed on July 1 in France, is to be held this morning at 11 o'clock at the Union church of Hinsdale. Mr. Weddell, along with four other Chicago boys, went to France from Pensacola, Fla. All of these four boys, Frederick Hough, Minor Judson Chapin, Harry Belle, and Weddell, who called themselves the "four musketeers," have been killed. They were among the 100 aviators who preceded Pershing to France. The parents have all been invited to be present at the service.

Prof. Gerald B. Smith, pastor of the Union church, will officiate, and Thomas C. MacMillan, for whom MacMillan Weddell was named, will speak. Mr. MacMillan and Thomas R. Weddell, the father of the young aviator, were on the Inter Ocean together at the time the boy was born. Mr. MacMillan is now clerk of the United States District court in Chicago, and Mr. Weddell is insurance editor of THE TRIBUNE.

There will be a dedication of the Union church service flag at the service.

MARINETTE SCHOOL BURNED.

Marinette, Wis., July 13.—The new John N. Davis High school of Menominee, Mich., built at a cost of $170,000, was partially destroyed by fire early today, due, it is believed, to incendiarism. The damage is estimated at $17,000 and is all on the interior.

CHINA TO BUILD SHIPS FOR U. S.

Washington, D. C., July 13.—China has been added to the list of nations building merchant ships to help defeat Germany. The shipping board today awarded to the Chinese government yard at Shanghai contracts for four cargo vessels of 10,000 tons each and took options for the building of 80,000 more tons.

The entire program will involve the expenditure of perhaps $30,000,000. Approximately 35,000 tons of steel will be shipped from this country, but the engines and other equipment will be built in China. Deliveries are to begin six months after the steel is received.

Take Body of Man from Drainage Canal at Sag

The body of a man, with a dent over the left eye that appeared to have been the result of a blow, was taken from the sanitary canal at Sag bridge yesterday. The man was about 45 years old, 5 feet 7 inches tall, and weighed about 160 pounds. He had a black mustache and black hair, cut pompadour. The body was taken to an undertaking establishment at Lemont. The coat on the body was made by W. S. Mills & Co., tailors, Chicago. The name of the man for whom it was made was almost illegible, but looked like "L. W. Deikum."

Facts About Furs

There never was a time in the history of fur buying in Chicago when it was more important for buyers of furs to know exactly the character of the fur house with which they do business.

The fur market this year has presented problems to the fur dealer which called not only for great buying skill and expert knowledge of furs, but for thoughtful selection with the exact requirements of the Chicago market fully in mind.

John T. Shayne & Company are in daily touch with market centers, and the collection of furs that is featured this year reflects, in price, quality and style, the ability of the Shayne organization to protect the interests of Shayne patrons whatever market conditions are.

New models are now being shown.

Remodeling

Those who wish fur garments made over into the new styles should not delay action, as the factories will soon be overcrowded with work.

FEDERAL DOUBLE CABLE BASE TIRES

Were tires perfect? Could no improvements be made?

Federal's answer is their exclusive Double-Cable-Base.

If tires are only armoured against attacks of road, they are only partially equipped to resist wear.

Federal's Double-Cable-Base prevents undue inside wear against the rim—at the same time making it possible to get more service outside against the road.

Four unstretchable cables anchor the Federal tire so correctly and securely to the rim that the longest, hardest use cannot make it shift. No other tire has this wonderful improvement.

AMERICA TODAY SHARES TRIBUTE TO BASTILLE DAY

Tricolor on New White House Pole and All Federal Buildings.

Washington, D. C., July 13.—Bastille day will be celebrated tomorrow by America in honor of the heroic part France is playing in the defense of the liberties of the world. President Wilson today ordered that the French flag be displayed over all public buildings and ships at home and abroad, and had a special flagstaff placed on the White House to bear the national ensign of France besides the Stars and Stripes.

Secretary Daniels has been designated to attend the Bastille day meeting at New York tomorrow evening as the president's personal representative. The British and French ambassadors will be among the speakers.

President Issues Order.

President Wilson's order read:

"In recognition of the valor, courage, and heroism with which the people of France have for nearly four years defended the liberties of the world, it is hereby ordered that the national flag of France be displayed on all public buildings and vessels of the United States, at home and abroad, on July 14, 1918, in honor of the French national holiday, Bastille day."

Four minute men of the committee on public information have instructions to read tonight and tomorrow to the 35,000,000 people they address a message to the people of France, which has been given to Ambassador Jusserand for transmission. Resolutions will be adopted approving the message, which closes with "the voice of America proclaims today with one accord, long live, long live—France."

Sends Cable to Poincare.

Tonight the president sent the following message to President Poincare:

"America greets France on this day of stirring memories with a heart full of warm friendship and of devotion to the great cause in which the two peoples are now so happily united. July 14th, like our own July 4th, has taken on a new significance not only for France but for the world. As France celebrated our Fourth of July, so do we celebrate her 14th, keenly conscious of a comradeship of arms and of purpose of which we are deeply proud.

"The sea seems very narrow today, France is so close a neighbor to our hearts. The war is being fought to save ourselves from intolerable things, but is also being fought to save mankind. We extend our hands to each other, to the great peoples with whom we are associated, and to the peoples everywhere who love right and prize justice as thing beyond price, and consecrate ourselves once more to the noble enterprise of peace and justice, realizing the great conceptions that have lifted France and America high among the free peoples of the world.

"The French flag flies today from the staff of the White House, and America is happy to honor that flag."

Observance in New York.

New York, July 13.—Cablegrams from twenty-four great American union labor organizations "to the people of France," felicitating them on the occasion of Bastille day, will be read here tomorrow night at a big patriotic massmeeting to be held in Madison Square Garden. Ambassador Jusserand, Lord Reading, Count Macchi di Cellere, the Italian ambassador, and other noted men will speak. Secretary Daniels, representing President Wilson, will read a message from the president "to the people of France."

The celebration here will include a military pageant at Madison Square Garden, in which British, French, American, Italian, Greek, Polish, and Serbian veterans of the war will participate.

Mayor Hylan next week will request the board of estimate to rename one of the finest New York thoroughfares as the "Avenue Joffre" in honor of the hero of the Marne.

HOMAGE OF CITY GOES TO HEROIC FRANCE TODAY

Guns to Boom as the Tricolor Floats in Grant Park.

6:30. Admission will be free to all, and no programs nor any other articles will be sold at the meeting.

Throughout the day the French flag will fly from many buildings, references to the day will be made in over 600 city churches, and numerous other celebrations will be held.

Oak Park's Plans.

Oak Park will celebrate today by an all day ceremony. There will be community singing of the "Marseillaise" and "The Star Spangled Banner." The celebration will be held at Scoville park, and will be under the auspices of all the churches. The invocation at the night service will be delivered in French by the Rev. Joseph Marselle.

The University of Chicago will celebrate in Mandel hall, University avenue and Fifty-seventh street. Dr. James Westfall Thompson, professor of medieval history, will be the speaker, his topic being "Jeanne d'Arc and Her Meaning to America." There will be French musical selections by the university French club.

Consuls at St. James.

Among the church services the most elaborate will be at St. James' Episcopal at 10:45 this morning, in which will be featured a procession in which A. Barthélemy, French consul; Horace Nugent, British consul; Dr. C. Vermeren, Belgian consul; G. D'Allagno, Italian vice consul, and Stuart R. Alexander, Brazilian consul, will take part, and in which flags of the various allied nations will be carried by army officers. The Rev. Samuel N. Watson of the American Episcopal church in Paris will preach and Mr. Barthélemy will deliver an address. The services will be under the direction of the Rev. Frederick L. Gratiot, curate of the church.

Lieut. Flachaire started a flight yesterday in his battle plane from Dayton, O., to Chicago, expecting to arrive on the lake front in the afternoon. Engine trouble compelled him to alight at Lima, O., according to a telegram received by Col. W. N. Pelouze of the Chicago Aero club. He will resume his flight today and fly to Grant park for the ceremonies.

Celebrations of Yesterday.

Many tokens of respect to France were offered yesterday also. The Board of Trade took a five minute recess at 11:30 in the morning, during which Vice President James A. Patten made a brief speech, and a set of resolutions read by John A. Bunnell was sent to Ambassador J. J. Jusserand.

Yesterday afternoon at Pilsen park there was a celebration under the auspices of the Société Française de Bienfaisance, with Gaston Bloch in charge of arrangements. The proceeds went to the war relief fund.

At the K. A. M. synagogue, Indiana avenue and Thirty-third street, special services in honor of Bastille day were held, and Rabbi Tobias Schanfarber in his sermon paid tribute to France.

MOTHERS OF AIR FIGHTERS PLAN AN ORGANIZATION

A new woman's patriotic organization will doubtless be the outcome of the reception given yesterday at the Art institute under the auspices of the American fund for French wounded.

It was a day specially devoted to the mothers of aviators, seventy or more of whom turned out to look at the marvelous paintings of the French artist-aviator, Lieut. Henri Farre.

Mrs. William E. Clarke and a committee of A. F. F. W. workers were hostesses at the reception and Mrs. Clarke announced that it was the plan to form a permanent organization similar to the Fort Sheridan association, to be called "The Mothers of Aviators." A meeting will be held later where the organization will be completed. Among those present yesterday who will join the association were:

Mrs. Kenesaw M. Landis,
Mrs. Rose P. Clark,
Mrs. Reuben H. Donnelley,
Mrs. George P. Fisher,
Mrs. Frank Le Roy,
Mrs. W. R. Hanecy,
Mrs. Henry Happ,
Mrs. John F. Holland,
Mrs. Charles Hastings,
Mrs. Rockwell King,
Mrs. Ira A. Jones,
Mrs. Thos. D. Knight,
Mrs. H. H. Lobdell,
Mrs. L. Hamilton McCormick,
Mrs. A. A. McCormick,
Mrs. John A. Orb,
Mrs. Philo Otis,
Mrs. Henry J. Powers,
Mrs. Charles Mosely,
Mrs. Andrew McLeish,
Mrs. Lyman A. Walton,
Mrs. Moses J. Wentworth,
Mrs. Earl Spencer.

All of these women have sons in the aviation service.

Over $400 was taken in yesterday afternoon at the exhibit. The proceeds are for the children of aviators killed in service and for the work of the American fund for French wounded.

Gen. Pershing Greets Clemenceau on Bastille Day

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, July 13.—Gen. Pershing sent the following telegram to Premier Clemenceau tonight:

"On the 14th of July (Bastille day), so symbolic of the will and determination of France, I desire to renew my expression of admiration for the splendid courage of the French people and their gallantry.

"The soldiers of the American expeditionary force find in her spirit a constant source of inspiration and encouragement."

Republican Woman's Club of 25th Ward Picks Officers

The Woman's Republican club of the Twenty-fifth ward met yesterday afternoon and elected the following officers: Mrs. William Severin, president; Mrs. Glen Jeffers, first vice president; Mrs. Mortimer Baruch, secretary, and Mrs. Donald Graham, treasurer.

The following board of directors was also elected: Mrs. George K. Smith, Mrs. George Williston, Mrs. Arthur Wallace, Mrs. John Morsbach, Mrs. Harry Bradford, Mrs. Edward Day, and Mrs. James Fressner.

BASTILLE FETE DRAWS SOCIETY TO LAKE FOREST

Brilliant Party on Beautiful Estate for French Orphans.

Whatever other Bastille day celebrations society persons attended yesterday, it seemed as if at some time or other between the hours of 4 and 11 o'clock every one went to the fete held in the gardens of Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Brewster's estate, Coventry in Lake Forest.

The gardens, which are noted for their beauty, never looked lovelier than when hundreds of young girls in fluffy summer frocks vied with the blossoms in making the most charming picture imaginable.

That one might not forget in the midst of such a pleasant and happy scene for whose benefit the fete was given, the little boys and girls were dressed as French orphans and in somber black smocks and wooden shoes they pattered around selling boutonnieres and bits of French tri-color ribbons.

As French Fighters.

Two of the most interesting youngsters were Edward Brewster, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Brewster, who was dressed as a French sailor, and his cousin, Brewster Perry, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. Newton Perry, who was a most picturesque little French soldier.

Beatrice and Frances Clow, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Clow Jr., were quaint little French maidens of the Louis Quinze period.

During the afternoon and evening there were various kinds of entertainments, including music, dancing, and a trained dog. In one garden there was a continuous Punch and Judy show, and in one corner of another garden was a fortune teller, whose identity remained unknown until dinner time, when some one discovered that underneath the gorgeous robes and jewels and brown paint was Frederick Walton.

Mr. Atkinson "Barked."

Charles T. Atkinson was the "barker" for all the shows, and he was kept busy running from one end of the gardens to the other. One of the most popular places was the children's playhouse, where a black mammy presided over the griddle and cooked Liberty pancakes.

A sign on the garden gate informed one that Liberty pancakes were "25 cents, men in uniform, 15 cents," and when a little French woman remarked that she preferred a man in uniform at 15 cents to the cakes at 25 cents the girls in charge had difficulty in explaining to her that the sign could not be taken literally.

A pig, a cow, several dogs, and other live stock were raffled, and there was a pond where children could fish for trinkets and in the rose garden were surprise packages tied to every bush.

Many Dinner Parties.

On the terrace were tables where dinner was served.

Some of those who entertained at dinner were:

Mr. and Mrs. Brewster
Mrs. T. W. Hinde,
Mrs. Howard Van-doren Shaw,
Arthur Heun,
Frederick Walton,
Mrs. Charles E. Pope,
Sidney W. Worthy,

Police Seek Auto Licenses and Glaring Headlights

All members of the police force have been instructed by Acting Chief Alcock to make diligent search for violators of the vehicle tax law and of the ordinance prohibiting glaring headlights.

In the police bulletin last night Acting Chief Alcock pointed out that there is a wide discrepancy between the figures of the tax collector and those of the secretary of state in the matter of licenses issued. All motor cars are to be stopped and inspected for 1918 licenses.

Complaints that many drivers are using glaring headlights have brought an order that all such violators are to be arrested.

SWINTON SPEAKING DATE CHANGED.

Announcement was made yesterday by Mrs. Russell Tyson that Maj. Gen. E. D. Swinton, originator of the British tank, will speak before the workers of the American fund for French wounded in room 313, 60 East Washington street, at 11:45 tomorrow morning, instead of 3 p. m., as previously announced.

FRANCE EXTOLLED BY ELIHU ROOT, WRITING REGRETS

Cannot Attend Chicago Celebration, but Pays Tribute to Our Ally.

Elihu Root has sent the following letter to Harry H. Merrick, president of the National Security league, expressing his regret at his inability to attend the Bastille day celebration in Chicago today:

"I regret very much my necessary absence from the meeting in Chicago to celebrate the French national holiday. I join with all my heart in the honor and affection for the people of France which are so universal and so sincere among my countrymen.

Based on Traditions.

"We express this feeling on the day of the taking of the Bastille, not merely to denote friendship and sympathy toward an ally, but there is a profound traditional sentiment for France among the Americans. We admire her splendid exact science, the qualities of mind which have made her language the most perfect vehicle for the expressing of definite and discriminating thought and the quality of character which have made it the natural language of diplomacy.

"We have never forgotten the aid which France gave us when we were engaged in that struggle for independence, which resulted in enlarging the liberty of the whole Anglo-Saxon race. Lafayette, Rochambeau, DeGrasse, Bergenness, and Beau Marchais are in the American Pantheon with Washington, Franklin, Hamilton, Jefferson, and Adams.

Proud of France.

"We cherish with them pride of friendship, the charm, romance, and beautiful love of country, which are inseparable from the memories of France, but something more than all of this urges us to celebrate the national anniversary of the French people. We have come to realize in these terrible years, as never before, the unity of democracy and the common inheritance of all free men in the ideals liberty.

"We celebrate the taking of the Bastille as a symbol of the long struggle of France for the rights of self-government and equal laws and freedom from autocratic rule and we realize now that the people of France have been our allies during all of that long struggle and the allies of all men who struggled toward freedom.

"We are proud to claim brotherhood with the men and women of France, whose noble fortitude and constancy in these days of trial and of suffering have shown to the world the power of liberty to build up the character of a free people. ELIHU ROOT."

30,000 SOLDIERS HONOR FRANCE AT CAMP GRANT

Big Military Demonstration Marks Celebration of Bastille Day.

Camp Grant, Ill., July 13.—[Special.]—Led by the war governor of Illinois and their dynamic commander, Maj. Gen. C. H. Martin, massed thousands in khaki today gave tribute to France in a mighty martial demonstration.

The inspiring spectacle began promptly at 8:45 a. m., when 30,000 soldiers of the Blackhawk division formed on brigade fronts, passed in review before their commander and Gov. Lowden, marching for the first time under the Stars and Stripes and the tricolor carried side by side at the head of the mammoth formation.

Sing Down Seven Bands.

Gen. Andrews, who commanded the division for the day, with Col. C. R. Howland leading the Chicago brigade, mounted the stadium while the clans were gathering and urged the Blackhawks to show their musical ability. His request was met by a continuous thunder of mass singing. Packed in one corner of the arena the five hundred candidates of the fourth officers' training school set the pace for impromptu entertainment. They "kidded" the rookies of the depot brigade as they filed into place on the hill; they roared marching songs, learned to perfection in the strenuous drill of weeks past; they drowned even war strength regiments with sweeping barrages of cheers, and they even attempted to drown out the seven bands massed near the stadium and thundering under the direction of "Zip" Waller, divisional musical director.

Music Is Stilled.

This was the scene that greeted Gov. Lowden and Gen. Martin as they appeared at the head of the main entrance to the arena. The music was suddenly stilled and as suddenly a score of bugles blared "To the General," while the waiting thousands heaved to their feet and cheered the state and division leaders to the echo.

Gen. Martin and his party reached the stadium, climbed through the ropes of the permanent boxing ring, and advanced to still the cheering. The commander then led another cheer for the governor before introducing Capt. Robert Payen, senior officer of the French training mission in Camp Grant.

"Here," cried the general, "is a man who represents that magnificent republic whose sons have made the immortal chant of bravery and devotion, 'They shall not pass.'"

French Officer Speaks.

Capt. Payen made his address with a sincerity which brought involuntary ripples of applause through the entire arena.

"Some days ago," he said, in part, "we celebrated here the Fourth of July, which in your country means the birth of national liberty. Such is the Fourteenth of July to all Frenchmen. Both historic days come within ten years of one another, and both were born of the same noble principles of liberty and equality. France watched with favor the birth of your great republic, and Lafayette, who fought shoulder to shoulder with Washington, brought back his consecrated sword to battle for the young French revolution and to make the Bastille day.

"That ancient Bastille was hated by French people as the monument of autocracy, the symbol of the power of kings. That is why the French by storm asserted their will over monarchy on July 14, 1789, and why all France was shaken with social and political revolution.

Understood by America.

"Lafayette sent word of the fall of the Bastille to America, the only nation he knew would understand the meaning of Bastille day. The French flag—the blue, white, and red—was born on that day and means in every respect what the Stars and Stripes mean. Your flag and my flag will always triumph against the forces of oppression.

"I was deeply moved to see your soldiers marching under the French and American flags; and be sure the people of France know and appreciate the honor. They will greet you as true sons over there and make more intimate the bond of friendship between our two nations."

When Capt. Payen finished speaking the massed band swung into the "Marseillaise." The great audience rose instantly and stood at salute until the anthem was concluded.

Judge Robert K. Welsh of Rockford was then introduced by the commander and made a stirring speech to the recently naturalized soldiers. He named the nations represented in the recent naturalization in turn and ended by paying tribute to the few loyal Germans who are now citizens, fighting in the division ranks.

After standing at attention through "God Save the King," Gen. Martin introduced the governor.

"Gen. Martin, officers and men of the Blackhawk division," said Gov. Lowden, "I cannot tell you how greatly I have been thrilled this morning as I witnessed the martial review. I am proud of Illinois for her contribution to this great division. I know that Minnesota and Wisconsin have contributed to it, but whether you hail from any of the three states you are adopted children of Illinois from now on. It is easy for me to effect this adoption because I was born in Minnesota, and Wisconsin is so near a neighbor to our doors."

After giving sincere tribute to France and delivery a war address, Gov. Lowden turned to the general.

"God bless you, Gen. Martin," he said, "and officers and men of the Blackhawk division, and know that our hearts are filled with love and pride for you, all of today."

Massed bands struck into the "Star Spangled Banner" and the division stood at a last salute before regiments streamed to barracks from the arena.

A LA FRANCE—14 Juillet 1918

BY V. M. LLONA.

O soldats héroïques, soldats meurtris,
champions indomptables de la liberté,
dont le nombre décroit à chaque assaut, hélas! mais qui toujours farouches interdisez aux multitudes teutonnes le cœur du monde, Paris,
ô Français qui luttez sans trêve
depuis que la Bête est déchaînée, entendez-vous cette clameur grandissant avec l'aube, étouffant la voix effroyable des canons, noyant les hurlements de la mitraille?

Posez un moment vos armes brûlantes sur le parapet de la tranchée, prêtez l'oreille.

"Qu'est-ce, murmure le poilu, connaisseur des bruits de la bataille, quel est ce piétinement comme d'un peuple en marche?
Quels sont ces cris comme de millions d'hommes en colère?
Est-ce une marée qui monte pour nous engloutir avec nos ennemis?
Est-ce la fin du monde et Dieu a-t-il jugé que rien, sinon la catastrophe universelle, ne pouvait racheter la folie des tyrans?"

L'ouragan se rapproche, furieux torrent dévastateur que rien n'arrête, inondation humaine qui déferlera bientôt sur les villes teutonnes, sur les terres de la race trois fois maudite
par qui tant de mères et tant d'enfants en deuil hurlent à la mort sur leurs foyers détruits.

Entendez-vous, Français?
Ce sont les armées d'Amérique qui viennent à la rescousse!
C'est la grande relève!

En ce jour qui commémore l'exploit de vos ancêtres dont le souffle puissant abattit comme une Jéricho odieuse la Bastille, symbole de la tyrannie, voici un autre souffle plus puissant encore:
il s'échappe en grondant de millions de poitrines et des millions de cœurs battent à l'unisson et des millions de bras ont fait le geste qui engage le Destin.

L'Amérique a ouvert ses veines et son sang va se mêler au vôtre qui a si longtemps coulé.
C'est la grande relève!

Et les ancêtres qui jetèrent leur sacrifice dans la balance, le quatorze juillet mil sept cent quatre-vingt-neuf, pourront dormir tranquilles:
ils ne seront pas morts en vain, puisque leur geste qui déclancha l'avalanche des Démocraties en abattant le donjon dont étouffaient Paris et la France, a libéré à plus d'un siècle de distance.
le monde entier.

JAP COMMISSION COMES TO STUDY U. S. RED CROSS

Later Will Visit European Battlefields to See How to Aid Suffering.

A prince and senator of Japan, heading a commission of the Japanese Red Cross, consisting of ten members, on their way to European battlefields to investigate conditions and recommend in what way Japan can serve suffering humanity among her allies, are the guests of Chicago today.

The commission, which consists of Prince Yoshihisa Tokugawa, Count K. Katsu, Dr. S. Ninagawa, Dr. Sawamura, Dr. Naito, Dr. Kageyama, K. Yoshida, and K. K. Kawakami, secretary, accompanied by William L. Keane of the American Red Cross, arrived yesterday from the west, staying at the Blackstone. They were the guests of the Chicago chapter of the American Red Cross and were entertained by the chapter at a dinner last night at the Chicago club.

At this dinner, at which Marquis Eaton, head of the Chicago chapter, acted as toastmaster, about fifty men prominent in Red Cross work gathered to welcome the visitors. An address of welcome was made by Howard W. Fenton, manager of the central division of the American Red Cross, while other addresses were made by Saburo Kurusu, Japanese consul to Chicago; Dr. Gideon Welles, Chicago member of the Red Cross mission to Roumania; and Prof. Frederick Starr of the University of Chicago.

Prince Arouses Enthusiasm.

Prince Tokugawa replied on behalf of the visitors and aroused great enthusiasm when, at the beginning of the dinner, he proposed the health of President Wilson. After acknowledging gracefully the courtesies which had been extended his party in America, Prince Tokugawa described the work of his commission.

"We wish," he said, "to assure our fellow workers abroad in the grand work of mercy and humanity that the Red Cross of Japan, small as it is, is eager to contribute a widow's mite toward the alleviation of the agony and suffering inflicted by the barbarous German methods of warfare upon the gallant fighters of our allied nations.

"In America our mission is not only to pay our respects to your magnificent Red Cross, but also to study some of the activities in which you are engaged for the promotion of those principles symbolized in the Red Cross. We shall go to England and Italy on a similar mission. In France and Belgium we shall visit those horrible regions which were once shrines of art and the abodes of nature's work of beauty, but which have been reduce to one vast scene of devastation by an enemy who has no respect for the laws of civilization."

Praise to America.

Prince Tokugawa praised America's part in the war as "great and noble" and destined to mark the dawn of a new era in the history of nations." He said the ideals of the Japanese Samurai were similar to those of this nation.

Earlier in the day Prince Tokugawa said that the thinking people of Japan and the vast majority of her responsible statesmen desired above all things to cultivate friendship with the United States and to coöperate in questions affecting China and other eastern matters. However, he stated his mission to be nonpolitical and his preference to avoid international politics, for which reason he declined to discuss Japan's Siberian policy.

Waits for Allies' Policy.

On that topic, however, Mr. Kawakami, secretary of the mission, said that Japan is fervently with the allies and is only awaiting the determination of the allied nations regarding a Russian policy to formulate her own, which, he said, would be in accord with that of the allies and without selfish motive.

Asked regarding the fitness of Japan's army and navy for the task of restoring order in Siberia, Mr. Kawakami said: "Our army is good, but then it would not require much preparation to drive the Bolsheviki out of Siberia. It could easily be done by a resolute army of 100,000."

The mission will visit Great Lakes today, returning for the Bastille day meeting at the Auditorium tonight. Tomorrow it will inspect local Red Cross activities, and in the evening will leave for Washington.

Chief Schuettler Spends Birthday in Hospital

Herman F. Schuettler, chief of police, spent his fifty-seventh birthday yesterday in Alexian Brothers hospital—rather happy under the circumstances. The chief was pleased with the world as he had right to be because, after being given up for dead for days, he has battled pneumonia with complications into defeat and is believed on the high road to recovery.

BISHOP, LINKING BOOZE WITH HUN, SAYS IT MUST GO

Methodist Leader Pleads for Open Coal Mines, Closed Breweries.

BY THE REV. W. B. NORTON.

Holding up before his audience at the Desplaines camp meeting yesterday a page from THE TRIBUNE and calling attention to the article written from Washington by Arthur Sears Henning in which the mine operators declare the government must choose between booze or coal, Bishop W. A. Quayle delivered a scathing denunciation of the liquor interests.

He was equally severe in his arraignment of Germany and pro-Germanism. He linked liquor with German influence in America and declared the time had come when both ought to be banished.

His address created the most intense enthusiasm. Frequent applause and several outbursts of shouts and at one time yells greeted his fervent oratory.

Praise Sherman's Stand.

Following his address resolutions were unanimously passed to send a telegram to United States Senator Sherman congratulating him on the stand he had taken in favor of wartime prohibition and a telegram to Senator J. Ham Lewis urging him to come out in favor of wartime prohibition and to present the matter favorably to the senate.

The yells came at the very point when Bishop Quayle held aloft the page from THE TIRBUNE and told the story of the action of the association of bituminous mine operators who declared "nation-wide prohibition for the period of the war is absolutely essential to speeding up the mines sufficiently to produce the 100,000,000 additional tons of coal the country will require this winter."

Stop Brewing; Feed Children.

"I am willing to go to the point of emaciation in self-denial," he said, "but when children have to gather coal in sugar sacks as they did last winter in Boston while the breweries ran at full blast, it is time this business is stopped.

"A child has a better right to sugar on his oatmeal than liquor has to have sugar in manufacture. Preachers have as good rights as brewers.

"The United States, thank God, has the first prohibition army ever mustered on the planet. If a man needs to be sober to fight he needs it to work. If the soldier needs to be sober so does his daddie, mother, and sister. I tell you this war is going to make the world sober.

Change Aprons for Overalls.

"There never was a better time for liquor men to get out of their business and to get into something else. It is easy to exchange white aprons for overalls.

"Some say, let congress settle these questions for us. It is the people who make and can unmake a congress. We can get a new congress if we want to, and we can get a new president if we have a chance. We, the people, 100,000,000 strong, have the right to say whether we or the brewers shall have coal and transportation.

"Some want us to spare the beer and do away with the whisky. Personally I'd rather die of whisky than of beer and sauerkraut. I say it openly, and I hope my words will be carried far, that if it had not been for the Germans this country would have been a prohibition nation before this.

Pacifists Vicious Liars.

"I wish prohibition could have passed today, so we could have spent Sunday shouting about it. I hope good people will keep the wires to Washington hot until it is passed."

Speaking directly on the war, he said: "Pacifists are vicious liars. Christ died, but he died fighting to make the right prevail.

"We've been on the verge of hell for four months. We might have slipped over but for England, France, and our own soldiers. If the western front breaks there is no use in living a minute. Women, get out of it! Men, die out of it! No matter how deep the trenches nor how full they are of dead bodies if beyond is the cross of liberty. This war is the most stupendous crisis since Calvary. It is the supreme struggle between right and wrong. If Germany breaks the ten commandments, as she has, she will have to deal with God."

Bishop Quayle preaches at 10:45 a. m. and 3 p. m. today.

New Star Vanishes After Shining Among Sky's Elite

Washington, D. C., July 13.—Nova, the new star which suddenly appeared in the eastern skies early in June, is now fading, the naval observatory announced today, and as yet shows no indications of bursting out again as a star of the first magnitude. Astronomical observers, who have been watching the visitor nightly, say it is the brightest star that has appeared since Kepler's star in the constellation Ophiuchus, first seen on Oct. 10, 1604, and which vanished in March the next year after reaching a brilliancy equaling that of Jupiter.

TWO CHICAGOANS GIVE LIVES ON FLANDERS FIELD

"Little Hank's" Death Is Described in a Letter; Hero List Grows.

Two more Chicagoans have fallen in Flanders fields—Victor Geisert, son of Charles Geisert, 714 West Fifty-ninth street, and Private Henry O. Halvorsen, son of Ole Anderson, 4345 McLean avenue.

Geisert was employed at the Union passenger station when he disappeared last October. No word of him came until February, when there arrived the announcement that he had safely landed in France and was serving as a teamster in the army.

Geisert was 20 years old and came out of the German Methodist home at Berea, O., two years ago. He had been placed there with his three younger sisters upon the death of their mother several years ago.

How "Little Hank" Died.

Through a letter from Sergt. E. F. Dunk of the Fifteenth company, Sixth regiment, marines, to Niels C. Knudsen of the Merchants Loan and Trust company it was learned Private Halvorsen was fatally wounded on June 10 in an attack near Chateau Thierry. Halvorsen was a former employé of the bank in the auditing department, and his is the first star of that institution's forty-three to turn to gold. He enlisted in the marines in May, 1917.

Sergt. Dunk's letter ran: "Little Hank was killed while making an attack of minor importance on a wood. I was with him at the time. We were advancing on a strong German machine gun position when a bullet pierced his helmet, entered his forehead, and emerged at the base of his brain. I carried him back for medical aid, not knowing the seriousness of his wound, and he passed away as I carried him.

"He died at 5:20 a. m. on the 10th of June. Hank was as much of a man as this outfit possesses. He seldom complained. He was on a machine gun team and in addition to the regular heavy pack he carried ammunition for the gun. I have his watch and memo book as a last remembrance.

Private Arthur G. Giles, son of Daniel F. Giles of Oak Park, a manufacturing chemist at 1521 West Van Buren street, is reported severely wounded with the marines. Two days after war was declared in April, 1917, young Giles enlisted and was with the first contingent to go across.

Private Dan E. Pasko, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Pasko, 2454 Carmen avenue, is reported severely wounded. He enlisted in the regular army in June, 1917, within a few days of his seventeenth birthday.

Tilghman Lived Here.

Lieut. Arthur Tilghman, whose name appeared on the marine casualty lists a few days ago, bulletined as severely wounded, and whose address was given as Houston, Tex., lived in Chicago for the last fifteen years and was commissioned a second lieutenant at the second officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan. He left his desk at the Union Insulating company to go to the training camp.

Lieut. Tilghman is now in a French base hospital. Some years ago, when a United States fleet made a cruise around the world, he, too young to go as a sailor, managed to ship as a cabin boy.

Cited for Bravery.

Private Jesse Beam, a former employé of THE TRIBUNE and brother of Miss Bessie Beam of 549 Fullerton parkway, is mentioned with three others for bravery. Lieut. T. J. Moreney of the Thirteenth machine gun battalion says, in official orders of May 25: "In rescuing the body of Private Patrick W. Joyce these men worked for nearly an hour in extremely cold water, running the risk of cramps from chill, and in reality risking their lives in an endeavor to save a comrade."

Praised by His Captain.

Private John Weber, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Weber, 5465 Harper avenue, was mentioned for bravery in a letter to his mother from his company commander, Lieut. Macon C. Overton, Seventy-sixth company, Sixth regiment, who wrote:

"Your son's work in the last ten days has been very dangerous, but he braved it like a man and not only honored himself, but the entire marine corps."

Private John A. McWilliams was mentioned in THE TRIBUNE of yesterday as slightly wounded. He is the son of John McWilliams, 1317 Early avenue. He is 21 years old and is serving with the Sixth regiment, marines.

Private Warren Crawford, 1945 Prairie avenue, a former employé of Lee, Higginson & Co., who left for France last September and enlisted in the American ambulance service under the French, has been decorated with the croix de guerre for bravery in rescuing wounded.

War Cross for Fishleigh.

Mr. and Mrs. John A. Fishleigh of 4537 North Robey street yesterday received a notification that their son, Lieut. Clarence T. Fishleigh, with a detachment of aerial observers, has received the French citation and has been decorated with the croix de guerre. Lieut. Fishleigh received his commission at the first officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan.

Brings Down Hun Plane.

Lieut. Eugene Blanchard Jones, who was mentioned on Friday in a dispatch from the Toul front as having brought down a Hun plane in flames, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ira A. Jones of 1027 Central avenue, Wilmette. His mother, greatly rejoicing at her son's exploit, spent yesterday afternoon at the Art institute seeing the French aviators and the pictures.

PRICE THEY WILL PAY BEGINS TO WORRY TEUTONS

"What Will You Do to Us After War?" They Ask Prisoner.

BY CHARLES H. GRASTY.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.

LONDON, July 13.—At the war office this morning I met a British major just back from three years' captivity in Germany. He couldn't tell me much about the general economic conditions, but two or three of his statements were interesting. Recently there has been a marked changed in the attitude of those with whom the prisoner comes in contact.

"For instance," said the major, "there's been much talk about how England would treat the Germans after the war. They asked me over and over again if they would be permitted to come to London. When I replied that every German would be put in a cage and dropped into the Thames they took it dead seriously. There's no doubt that the Germans, as a whole, are pretty low in their minds. The idea of beating the rest of the world in the war survives only among the military leaders, and these are willing to take long chances because the prize would be peculiarly theirs if they won.

Seek Their Own Imprisonment.

"We had one experience," continued the major, "that impressed us curiously. We were interned for a while in a big Rhine castle and found it filled with German officers. When opportunity for an inquiry offered we found that they were from the front and had been sent back and imprisoned for minor offenses. We got well enough acquainted in time to be told by the officers themselves that they committed offenses for the express purpose of escaping service in the trenches—'graves,' as they called them."

Prisoners' Treatment Better.

When asked about the treatment of officer prisoners the major replied:

"So far as my observation extends, it is excellent. It has improved greatly as the war has progressed."

The major passed through Berlin a few days ago and found it like a cemetery. There's not a single auto, except military ones, and he didn't see one rubber tire. The horses are "crowbaits." A man driving one like theirs in London would be arrested for cruelty to animals. Nobody shows the least fighting spirit. All seemed wistful for peace and fearful lest the world never again would take them back as friends.

Breaks Open Door and Finds Wife Asphyxiated

Breaking open the door of his wife's bedroom yesterday, Frank Fahr, 4019 Bernard avenue, found her dead from gas.

BURY "BONE DRY" BILL TILL AUG. 26

Washington, D. C., July 13.—[Special.]—Nation-wide war time prohibition was definitely sidetracked by the senate today until Aug. 26. On that date, under the terms of an agreement to which both factions bound themselves, the prohibition amendment will be brought up again and will be kept before the senate continuously until a vote is reached.

The "drys" were satisfied that the agreement was a victory for them. The "wets" were glad of an opportunity for gaining time.

While the "dry" amendment is resting the "wets" will utilize the time gained in preparing data showing the effect of nation-wide prohibition on the nation's financial situation.

Wilson Veto of Agricultural Bill Upheld, 172 to 72

Washington, D. C., July 13.—The house today sustained President Wilson's veto of the agricultural appropriation bill. A motion to pass the measure over the veto was defeated, 172 to 72.

The bill carries $28,000,000 and the feature which brought the president's veto was the fixing of the price of wheat at $2.40.

FUR REPAIRS AND FUR BUYING
Nation at War

WHEN two million men leave their peaceful occupations to kill the kaiser, a disruption of labor conditions almost equivalent to a universal strike is the result. But since the men have been drawn away gradually, many people have failed to realize the importance of the movement and its effect on their personal affairs.

The women who delay their fur repairing and fur buying until next winter, however, will have the shortage of skilled workmen brought home to them very forcibly. A large proportion of the expert "cutters," "operators," "cleaners" and "nailers" of former years are today "gunners" and "sharpshooters," "seamen" and "yeomen." It is, therefore, highly important that American women have their fur repairs and purchases completed at once. They will thus have the use of their furs when they need and want them instead of having them indefinitely held awaiting attention in fur stores. And they will save money.

A. Bishop & Co., a firm with an unblemished reputation of over fifty years' service to Chicago fur buyers, positively guarantee that the styles now advised by them in fur alterations and new garments will be the authentic dictates of fashion for next winter.

ARNOLD BENNETT AGAINST TERM "PEACE TRAP"

Says British Army Wants Serious Consideration of German Offers.

BY ARNOLD BENNETT.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.

[Copyright: 1918.]

LONDON, July 13.—There was another suggestion of peace last week when it was fairly circumstantial, and it appeared in the famous and important German newspaper Gazette of Vosges. It went so far as to say terms might be arranged, if only a method of negotiations could be arranged. Of course, it was treated in the majority of the British press so far as it was treated at all as "a peace trap" as part of the celebrated "peace offensive" of these ingenious people, the Germans.

Now I want to say why I object to the terms "peace trap" and "peace offensive" and similar terms.

First, they are vulgar and Prussian and militaristic terms in themselves. They imply that peace is a bad thing in itself and that we don't want peace and that Germans are peculiarly wicked in wanting peace, all of which is very misleading and quite contrary to fact.

Peace a Good Thing.

Peace is a good thing in itself. We want it, and Germans are not guilty of any particularly awful crime in wanting it.

Second, if the Germans continue to make suggestions of peace as they do, and every suggestion is treated as a trap, what end is likely to be the result on our armies? The result is likely to disgust our armies, which cannot be a good thing for their morale. Soldiers are realists, because they know what war is.

Third, though every peace offer up to the present has been quite impossible, it is by no means sure that one day the beginning of a real peace offer may not find itself in the newspapers. Such a peace offer may not at first sight have the air of being real and yet it may be real.

German Defeat in Field.

Until the German armies have suffered a spectacular defeat in the field such an offer is very improbable, but assuredly it is not impossible. After all, final proof of Germany's defeat will not be in the field, but in the peace terms. We do not know a great deal about the conditions in Germany, but we do know something. We know that her material condition is immensely worse than our own, and we know or we ought to know that she is internally divided.

Nothing is more silly than the popular notion that Germany is united. She is not. There have been scores of proofs of her disunion, and the latest has come this week in the fall of Kuehlmann's party. The strife may be secret in Germany, but it is acute and ferocious.

The military party holds the upper hand just now, and Kuehlmann, the foreign minister, has gone because he said that a military victory over Germany's enemies was impossible. Nevertheless Kuehlmann was only saying what millions of Germans, and many influential Germans, think, and the military party has only been able to throw him out because it has had some recent successes and because it holds in its hands all resources of physical power.

Sick of War.

In my opinion the great majority of Germans today are so sick of war that they would make peace on almost any terms and gladly. They are, however, gagged and bound and bullied.

A change in the color of events might well unbind and ungag them and the tables might then be turned in a most startling manner. Nobody can tell.

The chief thing to remember is that, despite appearances, Germany is divided against itself. Even the German high command is divided, and Germany needs peace more than any other belligerent country except Austria. Austria is the weakest link in the chain, but an essential link. If Austria breaks Germany has lost the war.

Why, therefore, should we rebuff Austria? Why should we not encourage her to break? If it be argued that our terms include the dismembering of the Austrian empire I reply that our terms do not include the dismembering of the Austrian empire.

To dismember the Austrian empire would be a grand thing. So would be the millennium. But ask our soldiers whether they think they are fighting for the millennium.

Not a Pacifist.

But though I would maintain the strictly correct and not unsympathetic attitude towards any suggestions from the enemy towards peace, I am decidedly not a pacifist. Indeed, I am strongly opposed to the frame of mind known as pacifism. I do not believe for one instant that even the astounding antics of our beautiful yellow press have hitherto done anything to prevent peace by negotiation which but for them might have been achieved.

I do not believe that the top dogs of Germany are now or have ever been in a mood to make peace which distantly approaches our idea of peace. Why should they be?

The western front is the main front, and on the western front they have had great victories this year. They possess an advantage of numbers, and their staff is as good as any in the world. They are very close to Paris. They are not so far off from the channel ports. Who shall say that it is inconceivable.

From Enemy Stand.

On the contrary, the eventuality is one which all responsible people face. If we wish to understand, and without understanding we cannot win, we must look at the situation from the enemy's point of view, from the point of view of the German high command.

The situation is not and never has been desperate. At any rate, in the past it has been in some ways more desperate than it is today.

Civilians are going hungry. Admitted. The U-boat campaign is a failure. Admitted. American armies which Germany said could not cross the Atlantic have crossed the Atlantic, and more American armies will follow. Admitted. What of all that? The chances of the Germans being able to deal a mortal stroke in the field are not yet gone. Moreover, the German high command has had tremendous strokes of luck in the past. It might have just another fine stroke of luck, and, more important, it really believes in militarism by caste, by tradition, by training. It believes in the instrument which it possesses. It has a genuine creed and that creed is the gun. The gun is its dogma. The dogma always defies realities.

Nothing to Gain.

Further and most important of all, the German high command has nothing to gain by a peace which would suit even the mildest of the allies. It has everything to lose by such a peace. Such a peace would annihilate it. The man or system will hang on with the most extreme desperation to postpone being annihilated. No possible peace will be offered or begun to be offered until the internal state of Germany or of Austria or of both has given great increase of strength to the party in Germany which hates and opposes the German high command.

No such peace will ever be offered by the German high command itself. It can only be offered by the Germans who are holding a pistol at the head of the German high command.

Peace Offers So Far.

Examine all suggestions for peace hitherto made by Germany, and you will see that on one or the other of the main points they are utterly impossible. Thus in last week's offer it was explicity stated that the terms of the Brest-Litovsk treaty with Russia must stand in their entirety.

Now if the terms of the Brest treaty stand, Germany will have control over the whole of eastern Europe, which she will be able to organize and to exploit to her own ends. If she has such control, she will never seriously and sincerely agree to join an honest league of nations. Unless an honest all embracing league of nations is established the allies will have fought in vain, for Germany will prepare to fight again and would fight again, and her resources for the next war would be terrifically increased.

League of Nations.

If you say that the league of nations is a dream, I advise you not to go and say it in the United States. The armies of the United States, which by the way have made an amazingly favorable impression on all the allies' soldiers, have come to Europe to fight for the establishment of the league of nations. Let us all get that indisputable fact well into our heads. The yellow press will try to hide it, but it can't be hidden.

To sum up, peace is urgently desired by the whole world and the attainment of peace must be regarded not as a crime of insanity but as a virtue and the highest wisdom; only the peace must be a peace which will satisfy the principles laid down by President Wilson. No such peace has yet been offered, nor are the rulers of Germany ready to offer such a peace. But events are moving quickly, and either in Germany or Austria, but particularly in Austria, events quite unconnected with actual fighting might suddenly and perhaps unknown to us render such a peace possible.

Yankee Y. M. C. A. Men Defy Chaos to Help Russians

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT

[SPECIAL CABLE TO CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

STOCKHOLM, July 12.—Despite checks attendant upon foreign intervention, disorganized transportation, and famine, the American Y. M. C. A. is carrying on its Russian work. Members, totaling seventy, are stationed from Archangel to East Siberia, and at least fourteen of them have moved boldly into regions convulsed by the guerrilla warfare raging between the bands of Czecho-Slovaks, Mongolian Cossacks, and soviet troops. The remaining fifty-six are stationed at Archangel, Kola, and Petrograd in the north, at Moscow in the center, and Nishi Novgorod, Kasan, and Samara on the Volga.

The association chiefs, headed by E. T. Colton, are assigning men to points where prisoner exchange is proceeding in order "that we may help fully to minister to the desperately needy Russians that are being returned by the central powers."

Treaty Opens Way for Work.

The Brest-Litovsk treaty has cleared up the questions causing uncertainties in the association's policy, and now its men are rallying splendidly to their work. Writing from Archangel, E. T. Colton says.

"The embassador in the extemporized embassy at Vologda is in good health and spirits, evidently enjoying his office. The embassy is established in a former clubhouse.

"Livingston Philips, American attaché, arriving here from Vologda, says that Russian traveling conditions defy description. Prices are unbelievable. An omelet is 15 rubles, a veal chop 30, sugar 30 rubles per pound, and black flour 1,800 per bag." (Before the revolutions in Russia a ruble was valued at 50 cents in United States money.)

Finland Turns to Monarchy.

The shaping up of Finland's new constitution proceeds along monarchistic lines, the committee intrusted with the preliminary work having adopted by 16 votes against 15 the constitutional committee's recommendations for a monarchical form. Slavic law was adopted, but the proposed raising of the monarch's age from 18 to 21 was rejected.

At a conference with United States Minister Morris, Gen. Mannerheim admitted that German influence is gaining in Finland and that he could not check it. This patriot, who rescued his country from civil war, is not reconciled to mere resentment over the Finnish régime. but is patiently biding the time when he can rally his forces to combat German dominance.

Prospects, however, are not hopeful, since Germany is persistently pushing into every department of activity in the subjugated regions of the Baltic. Her latest move has been to install a batch of Prussian professors in the ancient Livonian university at Dorpat, which was founded by Gustavus Adolphus.

Empty Shells Kill Eight in Storehouse Collapse

Montreal, Que., July 13.—Eight persons were killed and several others injured today by the collapse of the top floor, stored with empty shells, of a warehouse owned by Lymburner, Ltd., munition manufacturers. Among the killed was George Lymburner, a nephew of the head of the firm.

U-BOAT BEATEN; FAILS TO CHECK U. S. SHIPMENTS

Washington Says a Surprise Is Coming to the Germans.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., July 13.—[Special.]—The German submarine campaign represents a colossal failure to achieve the purposes for which it was launched.

The Germans not only have failed to starve England in three months, as they boasted they would, but have failed signally to diminish seriously the food and war supplies carried overseas to the British isles in the seventeen months of unrestricted submarine warfare.

Fail to Stop Troops.

The Germans not only have failed to prevent an American army from crossing the Atlantic, as they assured their people they would do, but have caused the loss of less than 300 American soldiers out of 1,000,000 already transported to France.

Within the next month the German people will be furnished conclusive evidence that they have been woefully misled by the Prussian war lords into the belief that their submarines could force the allies into submission. For military reasons it is not permissible to disclose the nature of this evidence now, but it may be stated that it is of a character that is expected to create a profoundly unfortunate impression upon the German people.

It will be shown that the utmost that the submarines have accomplished has not proved a serious embarrassment to the allies in the conduct of the war, and that the United States and the entente nations are in a stronger position than ever before to continue the conflict to victory.

With increased efficiency in the hunting down of U-boats and with the American shipbuilding program beginning to materialize, the allies gradually have been getting the better of the submarine. The German navy's submarine arm is showing a perceptible weakening of power.

Destroyers Increasing.

The naval destroyer and the depth bomb invented by American genius have proved the Nemesis of the submarine. In this contest the prowess of the allies is steadily increasing as the force of destroyers and ancillary craft increases while the prowess of the Germans steadily decreases as the destruction of submarines exceeds the rate of their construction.

There has been no short cut discovered to the obliteration of the submarine at one fell swoop, though thousands of devices and schemes have been proposed by American inventors to effect this much desired result. One bureau of the navy department is stacked almost ceiling high with the plans submitted by American citizens to wipe the submarine from the seas.

The navy department has pronounced nearly all these schemes visionary or impracticable, although it insists that every proposal has been given such consideration as it deserves.

AMERICA WINS SWEDEN FROM PRO-GERMANISM

Stockholm Newspaper Owner Gives Reasons for the Change.

"The great body of the Swedish people, aside from the ultra conservatives, the so-called 'court party' and the military officers, are sympathizers with the allies. The most radical Socialists, known as the 'Young Socialists,' who, at first were pro-German, are now, because of Germany's course in Russia, violently pro-ally. The great Liberal and Socialist parties, which includes the bulk of the plain people of Sweden, are also pro-ally, and this group now controls the Swedish government and its policies."

This is, in part, the message Capt. Sten Dehlgren, managing owner of the Dagnes Nyheter of Stockholm, the largest and most influential newspaper in Sweden, and formerly a captain in the Swedish navy, who has been in Chicago for several days.

For Germany First.

"At the beginning of the war German sentiment was much more prevalent in Sweden than it is today," said Capt. Dehlgren. "This was due to the fact that a large part of Sweden's trade had been with Germany, causing her mercantile class to favor German ideas; because the educated classes had come largely under the influence of German 'kultur,' since German is taught in all Swedish schools, and German and Swedish scholars had interchanged courtesies in a large degree; because the military party was favorable to Germany, since the Swedish military system is founded upon the German, and because there are 'junkers' in Sweden just as there are in Germany.

"Another reason was that Sweden had a traditional fear of Russia, and was always preparing against the possibility of a Russian invasion, ever since Finland was wrenched from Sweden by Russia.

Navy for England.

"However, there was always a strong minority party favorable to the allies, this being led by the navy, which, being modeled upon that of England, always looked up to England. As the war progressed and it was seen that there was no Russian peril for Sweden, sentiment began to veer. When the issue became clearly drawn, and it was perceived that Germany represented autocracy and the allies democracy, Sweden, a nation which is intensely democratic in sentiment, began to lean still more strongly toward the allies, and the educated classes also began to change their opinion.

"It must be understood also that German travelers were never popular in Sweden. They were arrogant and overbearing, economical almost to the point of stinginess, and in general exhibited bad manners.

"When America got into the war the effect at first was mixed. We were fed a good many misstatements by the prejudiced Swedish press—and I must tell you that the Swedish press, as it is known outside of Sweden, by no means reflects the sentiments of the people. As time went on, although some Swedes in the United States—a very few of them—created a bad impression by their letters home, most of the Swedes in America have had an excellent influence upon Swedish sentiment. The speeches of President Wilson, with their references to small nations and the enforcing of peace, have also had a profound and excellent effect.

Shied at War.

"But Sweden does not wish to enter the war. Its energies are directed toward maintaining neutrality. It is proud, however, and will fight either Germany or the allies, if affronted.

"Denmark and Norway are intensely pro-ally, Norway because of her commercial relations with England and the injuries done by German submarine warfare, and Denmark in memory of German treachery in 1864. Possibly two-thirds of Sweden is pro-ally today, but at least nine-tenths of Norway and Denmark, making more than three-fourths of Scandinavia enthusiastically for the allied cause. Since, as a result of the war, the three Scandinavian countries have been drawn together far more closely than ever before, the effect of the attitude of Norway and Denmark upon Sweden is most marked."

Capt. Dehlgren described the present political complexion of the Swedish government, which is controlled by a coalition of the Liberal and old Socialist parties, the premier, Nils Eden, being a Liberal, and the cabinet containing six Liberals and five Socialists. The government is sympathetic to the allies and so is the lower or popular chamber, where the coalition controls nearly 70 per cent of the vote. The upper or aristocratic chamber is still conservative and pro-German. The king is neutral, but his wife, a German princess, is one of the leaders of the German party.

acres that will make big profits for their owners in a few years when this district becomes city property.

This property is "the garden spot" of Cook County—45 minutes from Chicago's Loop. Rich, productive soil, high and gently rolling, commanding a view of the surrounding country for miles. Fronting on 3 main section line streets—Crawford Ave., 103rd St., and 111th St., 2 miles west of Beverly Hills, Longwood, Tracy and Morgan Park. Asphalt, cement and stone roads right to the property.

This Is Longwood Farms Today!

Suburban property that will drive down the cost of living and unite the beauties of home in a fine suburban community with the profits that can be made from productive land.

It is patriotic and thrifty to invest your savings and your earnings in Longwood Farms. It is patriotic because you are helping to win the war. It is thrifty because the dollars you put into this property mean profits for you—the profits for you mean that you will be better able to bear your portion of the burden of this war.

Longwood—Tomorrow!

Longwood Farms mean big profits for their owners. Each Longwood Farm will cut up into 48 city lots, including four corners. Think what this means! Today unimproved subdivisions are selling for $250 a lot for inside property and from $1,500 up for business corners—an average generally of better than $350 a lot. Now consider Longwood Farms—48 lots at this figure—and there is no question about their value—would net their purchaser $16,800—a profit on the investment of over 1,000%!

Longwood Farms lie in the direct path of the city's growth. What has happened at 63rd and Halsted, at Kedzie and Western, at 79th and Halsted—what happened when that former acreage became city property will be repeated here at Longwood Farms. Every dollar invested in these acres today will ripen into just as large profits in 10 years or less as the acres located at the intersecting streets above mentioned. Reason this out for yourself!

Longwood Farms, Per Acre as Low as $325 an Acre and Upwards. Terms: 1-5 Cash, Balance in 6 Years

ETTELSON TELLS WHY CITY NEEDS NEW BASIC LAW

Points Out Defects of the Present System to Judge Carter.

Vital weaknesses and financial waste due to the present antiquated system of government in Chicago and Cook county that could be easily cured by changes in the state constitution were pointed out yesterday in a letter written by Corporation Counsel Samuel A. Ettelson to Supreme Court Justice Orrin R. Carter, chairman of the constitution convention campaign committee.

The defects were enumerated by Mr. Ettelson in response to a request from Justice Carter for the corporation counsel's views on the necessity of holding a constitutional convention.

City's Needs Listed.

Mr. Ettelson's letter lays particular stress upon Chicago's need of the following changes, which may be made satisfactorily only through the revision of the state's basic law:

Provision for the consolidation of all the numerous local governing agencies in Cook county, including the merging of the county, city, and sanitary district into one political entity.

Revision of the revenue laws to make it possible to conduct the city's financial affairs in an economical and efficient manner.

Elimination of the constitutional provision placing a twenty year limitation on bond issues and provision that no taxes be paid on municipal securities.

Constitutional permission for broad powers in the matter of city charters.

Puts Consolidation First.

"I believe it is generally conceded that a consolidation of our local governments is desirable," says Mr. Ettelson's letter. "It would result in greater economy and more efficiency if the present complex system of local government were done away with and a simpler system substituted. The real big saving would come by bringing the county, city, and that part of the sanitary district lying within the county under a single governing jurisdiction.

"To do this by statute calls for so many legislative enactments and votes thereon that it may be dismissed as a dream. What is needed, therefore, is a new constitutional provision making it possible to combine all these governments into one exercising the functions of both city and county and administering the affairs of all other local governments, such as the forest preserve district, park district, the board of education, etc. Such a consolidation would accomplish real results in the way of economy.

Finances and Taxation.

"Under the present constitution the finances of the city must be taken care of on practically the same basis as the financial affairs of a village. Bound up in the question of how to finance the city is the question of equality and uniformity of taxation, according to the value of property, which is a problem affecting the whole state. In addition to the changes needed for the whole state, there should be a provision for a limit to the indebtedness for the city which would be adequate for its needs and at the same time mean something.

"Another feature of the old constitution which has been found expensive is the twenty year limitation on bond issues. Long time bonds may be floated at a lower rate of interest than short time bonds. A sort of equilibrium was established by the sale of bonds "over the counter," which did away with a large expense in the disposition of bonds. Since the war, though, there has been a change, as had been expected, and this will be accentuated as time goes on, and the city is bound to come into competition with the national government in marketing bonds. Hence this twenty year limitation, which can be of no practical value under the circumstances, should be done away with.

Pay Little in Taxes.

"Another provision of the constitution which might be done away with to advantage is that which makes it impossible to exempt municipal bonds from taxation. If the holders of such bonds would list them for taxation there might be some compensatory advantages, but experience has demonstrated that securities of this kind pay very little in the way of taxation.

"While the present constitution will permit the city to adopt a charter that will apply to local conditions, there has been no substantial progress in the matter of local self-government. The needs of this city being so different from the needs of other municipalities in this state, it has been found necessary to pass a large number of acts which ostensibly are designed for cities and villages of more than 100,000 population, but which in fact are local laws for Chicago. The question of constitutionality necessarily crops up every time one of these laws is passed, where the classification in effect makes them local laws.

New Charter Needed.

"It will be necessary, therefore, in order not to lose what we already have, to make constitutional provision for a charter giving a greater degree of self-government than the people of the city now have and also to make provision for the enactment of such laws by the legislature as will fit the city's needs in such cases as cannot be provided for by charter.

"As to all local matters that can be regulated and controlled without affecting the balance of the state, there ought to be no state interference, and the simplest and most effective way of accomplishing a complete divorce in this respect, and of developing home rule in cities, is to give them the right to frame their own charters."

MADE IN AMERICA

U. of C. Laboratories Turn Out Drugs to Replace Former German Products in World Market.

EXPERIMENTS are being made at the University of Chicago chemical laboratories to fill the gap in the drug market caused by the cessation of importation from Germany. Prof. Julius Stieglitz, chairman of the department of chemistry, has been appointed special expert in the United States health service of the treasury department to supervise the investigations.

As a result of the experiments, the drug market will be divested of its Teutonic tinge and will undergo a thorough process of Americanization. Substitutions for drugs previously furnished by Germany are being prepared with such success that the German qualities will be eclipsed. Salvarsan or "606" is being produced at the university laboratories of greater purity than that heretofore imported.

Under the authority of the federal trade commission, new American names are being assigned to drugs in order that after peace is declared American manufacturers will have a fair market. A local anaesthetic, procaine, a substitute for cocaine, has been introduced as novocaine. A new product has been invented under the name of apothesine. It is reported to be as good an anaesthetic as procaine.

ARREST BROKERS FOR VIOLATING BLUE SKY LAW

Warrants charging criminal violations of the "blue sky" law were sworn out yesterday by Assistant Attorney General Raymond S. Pruitt against M. M. Green company, brokers at 29 South La Salle street, E. H. Green, a member of the firm, and George D. Weiser, a salesman.

Weiser, who was arrested Friday night, was arraigned in the South Clark street police court in the morning and released on a $1,000 bond to await a jury trial. A second warrant was issued against him yesterday.

As the result of an investigation by the attorney general's office, Mr. Pruitt said, it has been learned that the M. M. Green company have been selling stock without a state license in the Liberty Silver company.

D—N THE K—R

Which Probably Is the Slogan of Fugitives Caught in Hunt for Slackers.

ONE of the interesting byproducts of the hunt for slackers, according to the police, is the fact that numerous fugitives from justice have been taken while sauntering about feeling secure in the thought they were in a strange city.

B. Heeninghaus is held for the police of Flint, Mich.

Harry Christ is held as a fugitive from Cedar Rapids, Ia.

A. J. Green is wanted by the police of Boston and Jersey City.

Henry Cohens is accused of stealing Red Cross buttons in Chicago.

John Frederick, Fred Russo, and John Fabri are held on suspicion.

3 QUICK LUNCH MEN ARRESTED AS CHECK JUGGLERS

Three men employed in the Weeghman restaurant, 126 West Madison street, were arrested last night and charged with the manipulation of ham and, spaghetti red, stack o' wheats, and lunch checks in a way that was profitable to themselves but not entirely within the law. The technical charge is larceny and the men are:

LEE RUSSELL, 614 Monticello avenue, counterman.

CARL HUELSMAN, 1945 Lincoln avenue, cashier.

EUGENE ADAMS, cook.

For some nights past detectives have been eating themselves almost sick in Weeghman's trying to figure out how it was that the receipts were so small, while the patronage was so big. Finally Detective Sergeants Hans and McCaffery solved the mystery.

It is charged that Russell, the counterman, would call out "extra fine" occasionally during the night's work and that would be the signal to Adams, the cook, and Huelsman, the cashier, that there was an order going through without Mr. Weeghman being let in on it. "Extra fine" for the help, so to speak.

It is charged that by manipulation of checks in which the cashier and counterman were abetted by the cook, the trio netted about $3 each a night.

North Side Commercial Fair to Show Patriotism

Patriotic events will mark the opening on July 22 of the fair of the North Side Commercial association in Arcadia hall at Sunnyside avenue and Broadway.

Many businesses are combined to make a showing, and it is reported by Secretary Frank J. Jungen that every inch of floor space has been taken.

Booths from the Coliseum have been transported to the big hall and these will be filled with exhibits.

Court Rules Employes Owe Fruitvalers $1,331

Tables were turned in a suit brought by several former employés of the Fruitvale Grocery and Market yesterday when Judge Windes decided that instead of $10,000 damages being due the plaintiffs, as was asked, they owed the Fruitvalers $1,331. Harrison Parker, Fruitvale chief, said last night that the decision was based on an audit of the books, which showed that the men, as employés, had overdrawn their accounts.

The original plaintiffs in the suit and the money they are now held to owe the concern are: J. S. Mitchell, $273.91; R. S. Edwards, $234.64; P. E. Gray, $547.45, and W. V. McLaughlin, $115.26, with costs, to be paid jointly, $159.74. The Fruitvale organization, according to Mr. Parker, now has 11,000 members.

SHOOP GOES TO WASHINGTON.

Superintendent of Schools John D. Shoop left yesterday for Washington to attend a conference of the committee on educational preparation for foreign service.

CLOWNS OF MANY LANDS IN CIRCUS

Funmaking is more important than ever in the Barnum & Bailey circus, which closes its engagement at the White City grounds with performances this afternoon and tonight.

Many clowns have been added to the performing staff of the circus, with the result that nearly every country on the globe is represented. In addition to impersonations of various nationalities there are human airplanes, cows, giraffes, dogs, cats, geese and all manner of wild and domestic animals walking about in most grotesque fashion.

There are several babies among the animal stars of the circus this year, a small giraffe and some baby kangaroos being notable.

TWO THEATERS LATE ON LICENSE.

Only two of the eleven larger theaters have failed to apply for licenses under the city's anti-scalping ordinance. These are the Majestic and the Cort, owners of which were warned by the police yesterday that the time for making applications had expired.

F. W. PECK, DEAN OF CHICAGOANS, TO DINE 50 'PALS'

Recalls Early Days of the City as He Nears His 70th Birthday.

Ferdinand W. Peck, dean among native Chicagoans, is to commemorate his seventieth birthday tomorrow at the Union League club by giving a luncheon to fifty well known Chicagoans who have been associated with him in his former enterprises.

Mr. Peck is supposed to be the oldest living native Chicagoan. It was he who built the Auditorium and started the present development along Michigan avenue. He was vice president of the World's Columbian exposition and commissioner general from the United States to the Paris exposition.

For many years he was president of the board of education. He was one of the organizers of the Chicago Atheneum and the old Citizens' association. In addition, he was one of the founders of the Press, Calumet, South Shore, and Union League clubs. During the World's Fair period he was president of the Union League club.

From Town to Metropolis.

"It is a wonderful thing, in the span of one man's life, to see a city grow from 20,000 inhabitants to 2,750,000," Mr. Peck said last night, "and that is what I have witnessed. I was born July 15, 1848, in a house that stood on the present site of the Grand Pacific hotel. There was no building then between my father's house and Lake Michigan.

"My father was a soldier in Fort Dearborn. He built the first frame building and the first brick building in Chicago. The frame building stood at La Salle and South Water streets, where he sold supplies to the Indians. The brick building stood at Washington and La Salle streets, where the Stock Exchange building now stands.

"When I was 7 years old my father moved to Michigan avenue, just south of where the Chicago Club building now stands. The lake came up to the east line of Michigan avenue then. I have skated and sailed yachts all over where Grant park is. We used to shoot ducks where a lot of our big buildings now stand.

How Grant Park Started.

"It was about sixty-three years ago that the Illinois Central began to build its line on a trestle out in the lake. It does not seem to be generally known that the start of Grant park came when débris from the thousands of buildings burned in the great fire of '71 was dumped in the lake. That was the first filling to be done, and it has been going on ever since.

"One of the dearest friends I ever had was Joseph Medill, to whom the people of Chicago owe much for THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE. During his active days there was no one with whom I was more intimate.

"My wife told me that, now that I was close to the three score years and ten mark, the proper thing for me to do was to start out and get a few of my old friends together. I was afraid that most of them would be out of town, but I have been pleased to find most of them here."

Mr. Peck gave four years to helping make the world's fair a success. He spoke of it last night as "one of the milestones in the history of Chicago's development."

ATHLETE-FLYER HOME ON FURLOUGH

LIEUT. RALPH MUELLER.

Lieut. Ralph Mueller, known as an athlete in Chicago, having been a noted half miler for the Chicago Athletic association, arrived home on leave of absence yesterday from Taliaferro aviation field, Fort Worth, Tex., where on July 3 he received his commission as a lieutenant in the aviation service.

Lieut. Mueller is the son of Paul F. P. Mueller of 1445 Granville avenue, head of the Mueller Contracting company, one of the leading Americans of German birth in Chicago. Lieut. Mueller, when given his commission, was also given his choice of service, as between scouting, bombing, or fighting. He chose fighting, the most dangerous branch, and his friends in Chicago are confident he will acquit himself creditably in France.

"LADIES' MAN" HELD AS CHIEF OF ROBBER BAND

With the arrest last night of a debonair youth who has been dubbed "the ladies' man" because of his seemingly harmless disposition, the United States army authorities and the police of South Chicago recovered stolen goods estimated at more than $100,000.

The man taken is Frank Lemar. In the basement of the saloon of Charles Costenla at Ninety-third street and Exchange avenue, the police found more than $25,000 worth of goods, embracing officers' raincoats directed to the American expeditionary forces, furs, electrical supplies, shoes, and fine cloths. Costenla also was arrested.

Another suspect taken is Charles De Wartz of 8019 Exchange avenue, proprietor of a shoe store. A fourth is Mandell Olken, a young man of no apparent employment.

Lemar, who is believed one of the heads of a gang of freight thieves, has been remarked by the police as a young man of means. He seemed to have no occupation, but had plenty of money, living in ease in the Exchange hotel. Also he possessed a motor car and spent much time driving about the section.

On Wednesday evening Detective Sergts. Goranson and Mallon chanced to see Lemar's car in front of De Wartz' store and recalled that the car had been stopping there regularly of evenings. Presently Lemar emerged and carried some packages into the store. The detectives arrested him and De Wartz, discovering some of the stolen goods.

In the recovered loot was $2,000 in cigars and also numerous packing cases of boots consigned to the army.

ALDERMEN ASK MAYOR TO KEEP HIS GAS PLEDGE

Demand That He Order Appointees to Stop Blocking Fight.

Mayor Thompson was asked yesterday by the city council committee on gas litigation to issue orders to his appointees that they cease interference with the prosecution of the city's claim of $10,000,000 against the Peoples Gas Light and Coke company for alleged overcharges.

Corporation Counsel Ettelson and City Comptroller Pike are the men accused of holding up pay rolls for the lawyers, experts, and accountants engaged in the work. Mr. Ettelson said under no circumstances would he approve payments to Donald R. Richberg and Glenn E. Plumb, the city's special attorneys in the gas cases. Mr. Ettelson also declared that he would advise Mr. Pike not to pay the rolls for accountants.

Discuss Mandamus Proceedings.

The committee discussed the advisability of starting mandamus proceedings against Mr. Pike to compel him to pay the vouchers. Mr. Richberg explained that even if this were done no decision from the Supreme court would be expected for six months. In the meantime, he said, the experts and accountants would suspend their work, thus seriously interfering with the city's claim.

"Send a letter to the mayor and let him know what's going on," said Ald. T. J. Lynch.

"I think we ought to hear from the mayor before doing anything," said Ald. H. E. Littler. "If he refuses to have these payments made then it's time to talk about other means. The thing I don't understand is that the administration has been paying out on these accounts for the last two years and only stopped when the controversy arose between Mr. Richberg and Mr. Ettelson."

Accuse Administration.

The balance of the members of the committee were outspoken in declaring that the administration was seeking to hamper the litigation.

The committee sent a letter to the mayor asking that he carry out his pledge to hurry the successful prosecution of the claim. The letter stated that unless the payments are made there was every reason to believe that the litigation would be hampered.

"As members of the city council," part of the letter read, "we are not interested in the excuses or pretexts advanced by the corporation counsel or the controller as justification for refusal to pay for work done under the direction of this committee. The accounts are the same as have been approved and paid for the last two years. The same officials who lawfully approved these accounts for the last two years will find that the law has not changed."

It is expected that the mayor will accept the view of the law department and will refuse to order the payments made. In this event, it was pointed out, the committee may resign and let the administration accept the responsibility for the gas cases.

REPORTS LOSS OF $200.

Mrs. Helen Hartman of 5715 Calumet avenue, reported to the police yesterday that she had been robbed of or had lost $200 in $10 bank notes while shopping in a store at 26 East Van Buren street.

USE WRIT TO REGAIN THEIR GRANDDAUGHTER

Violent litigation for the custody of Margaret Ashton, 5 years old, granddaughter of W. G. Nichols, vice president of the American Manganese Steel company of Chicago Heights, is promised as the result of the girl's removal from Port Byron, Ill., early yesterday by Mrs. Nichols and Cook county deputies.

It was reported from Moline, Ill., that Mrs. Nichols, accompanied by a Chicago Heights police matron, three Cook county deputy sheriffs, and two other men, served a writ of habeas corpus on Mrs. Grace Wendt at 7:00 in the morning and took the girl.

The writ was issued on Friday in the Circuit court after Mr. and Mrs. Nichols had made representations that the girl was about to be removed from the jurisdiction of the court. The girl is the daughter of the former Miss Nichols and Edward H. Ashton.

The bill filed by Nichols stated that Ashton became angry when Nichols, who is head of the Chicago Heights draft board, refused to obtain his exemption, and sent Margaret to live with his sister, Mrs. Wendt, in Port Byron. Mrs. Ashton died when Margaret was 1 year old.

It was also represented that Mrs. Ashton, before her death, asked that Margaret be kept by Mr. and Mrs. Nichols. Ashton is is service in Kansas city.

It was reported in Moline that Ashton proposes legal action and that his attorneys had declared the serving of the writ in Port Byron by Cook county deputies an illegal proceeding.

COLONEL 'FALLS' FOR SLICKER IN RED CROSS GARB

Young Woman Also Stings Gold Coast Family for $185.

Revelations last night led the police to take up the trail of an alleged woman slicker who has of late, they say, posed variously as a Red Cross nurse, a war worker, and a house maid, in each instance profiting to her own advantage. The woman is about 28 years old and has used the name of Miss Rose Shaffner.

Some of Her Feats.

Some of the feats of strategy ascribed to her are:

Robbery of the home of George D. Wilkinson, 224 South Euclid avenue, Oak Park, getting $600 worth of money, jewelry, and wearing apparel; getting in with a society girl in Evanston and delivering a Red Cross lecture which netted the Red Cross $85 which it never got; "touching" a gold coast family, name censored by the police, for a loan of $185, giving in return a worthless check.

It is charged that in securing employment with Mrs. Wilkinson she gave as her reference "Mrs. Moran of the Stratford hotel." It is said that she was registered there as "Mrs. Moran," and that she answered the phone when Mrs. Wilkinson called and gave herself a good "character." After that she left without paying the hotel bill, the police say.

Real Colonel Stung.

It is also whispered that there is a certain colonel in the regular army who fell for her heroic Red Cross line of talk to the extent that he bought a "nifty present for her which has never been delivered and never will. Detective L. V. Parks of Oak Park has been on the trail of the lady slicker for several days.

Last night he declined to "tell on" the colonel or reveal the name of the gold coast family that was "stung" for the $185.

Girl Charges Mother Taught Her to Steal

Bernice Brychi, 12 years old, told the police yesterday that her mother, Mrs. Frances Brychi of 8815 Manistee avenue, with whom she was arrested for shoplifting, taught her to steal. She promised to appear against her mother tomorrow.

Peter Pappedakis of Lansing, Mich., who displayed a bank book indicating deposits of $2,500 in Chicago banks, was arrested on a charge of stealing $4 worth in a loop store.

Edward Madiol of 816 Ballou street was accused of stealing $15 in a store.

ACCUSE LA SALLE STREET BROKER OF CON GAME

Operator of 'W. R. Barnet & Co.' Arrested on 3 Charges.

William R. Barnet, a broker, 30 years old, 4900 Sheridan road, was arrested last night on three charges growing out of financial transactions. Until about a week ago he operated an office at 208 South La Salle street under the name of W. R. Barnet & Co.

The charges were brought by Bert Iver Johnson, 749 East Forty-third street, who alleges confidence game; C. D. Sober, 6155 Kenwood avenue, charging larceny by bailee; and William Bierkamp, First National Bank building, who alleges larceny by embezzlement.

Johnson alleges that on May 27 he bought ten shares of stock in a new state bank being organized for $125 a share and that the bank didn't "come through." Sober has a claim of $800 and Bierkamp of $300, details not explained.

Barnet was taken into custody by Detective Sergeant Barney Cohen and released under bond signed by H. Nelson, a saloonkeeper, without being locked up. Attorney Jacob Levy, speaking for Barnet last night, said that the arrest was due largely to a misunderstanding and that there was no criminal intent.

He explained that Barnet had loaned negotiable notes and securities to a total of $20,000 to another brokerage house and that they had been unable to return them. Securities put up by the men causing the arrest, he explained, unfortunately figured in the transaction.

Attorney Levy said that late yesterday the claims of Sober and Bierkamp had been satisfied and that he believed all charges would be dropped on Monday when the case comes up for hearing.

Women Lawyers Discuss War Work at Picnic

War work and discussions of social hygiene were taken up by members of the Illinois Women's Bar association when seventy-two of them were entertained in a picnic at the home of Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCulloch in Evanston yesterday.

There was an address by Dr. Rachel Yarros and a discussion of the relations of the various professions. War aid was decided upon in a plan to take up hospital work under the auspices of the association.

Mrs. Charlotte White, a Chicago attorney, spoke on "The Americanization of the Foreign Born." Resolutions introduced by Mrs. McCulloch were adopted urging the single standard of morality in America. During the afternoon the women marched to Roycemore field and were drilled by Lieut. T. R. Gibbons. In the evening thirty members of the women's department of the Illinois Medical association were guests of the lawyers.

You Can Add Many Years to Your Life and Live Better Than You Have Ever Lived Before!

A NEWPORT FIVE-ACRE FARM ESTATE and Villa Site on Beautiful Santa Rosa Sound Should Provide a Life Income for All Your Needs—and More

You have worked hard for years. Perhaps you have accumulated a few thousand dollars. But the time when you can throw off the yoke, work less, play more and really LIVE seems as far away as ever.

Our proposition is for men like you, who are not ambitious for wealth, but long for escape from the business treadmill, opportunity for recreation, freedom from worry, with just enough work to keep you from "rusting."

We offer you a chance to be one of the four hundred owners of Newport Farm Estates and Villa Sites on beautiful Santa Rosa Sound, on the west coast of Florida, where a modest investment should enable you and yours to live better than you have ever lived before, and enjoy life to the utmost.

THE NEWPORT ESTATES STOCK FARM has subdivided 2,000 acres of its choicest holdings into 400 five-acre tracts, which will be cleared and scientifically developed as a unit for a period of five years.

These five-acre tracts, each stocked with two cows, two brood sows and two ewes, together with a Newport Villa Site on the Sound, are being offered for $1,000 each under a provision whereby we will clear and cultivate your land and breed and care for your live stock for a period of five years, you to receive one-half the revenue derived from land and stock during that period.

You can take possession of your villa site at any time, build your bungalow home, beautify it with trees and shrubbery and flowers, and enjoy the boating, bathing, fishing and hunting in this delightful region, while the pioneer work of developing your Farm Estate is being done for you.

Your five-acre Farm Estate will not in any instance be more than thirty minutes' walk from Newport.

Newport is located 36 miles directly east from the city of Pensacola, on Santa Rosa Sound—a body of water separated from the Gulf of Mexico by a narrow strip of land called Santa Rosa Island.

Dotted along the mainland, on either side of the townsite of Newport, are beautiful little communities nestled among groves of cedars—"Mary Ester" with its famous "Cedars Hotel," "Camp Walton" with its many charming bungalows, and "Harris" with its pretty homes half hidden among the stately oaks.

The United States Government, in connection with Oskaloosa county, is building a hard surfaced road through our property, connecting with the Old Spanish Trail and the various automobile roads leading to every section of the United States.

The climate of Western Florida, contrary to the idea generally prevalent, is delightful the whole year around. The cooling breezes from the Gulf of Mexico afford a welcome change from the sultry, sickening heat so familiar to all in the North, East and Northwest.

During a period of 24 years, the warmest July average reported was 83. The winter climate is a joy indeed. A man can work the year 'round in his shirt sleeves.

This part of Florida is a veritable paradise for the sportsman. The Gulf of Mexico and the numerous fresh water streams teem with every variety of fish, while game of all kinds—ranging from wild turkey to deer—is plentiful.

Health conditions are unsurpassed. There is an abundant supply of pure, crystal-clear soft water. Springs abound and clear streams of pure water flow in every direction.

What more could you desire than a pretty bungalow home in Newport, with a five-acre Farm Estate within easy walking distance, to provide for you and your family an income more than sufficient for all your needs?

Your land will produce at least two crops a year. Your cows will furnish you with more milk, cream and butter than you can use.

Your two brood-sows should average at least five pigs to a litter and two litters each year. Pork can be produced as low as two cents per pound.

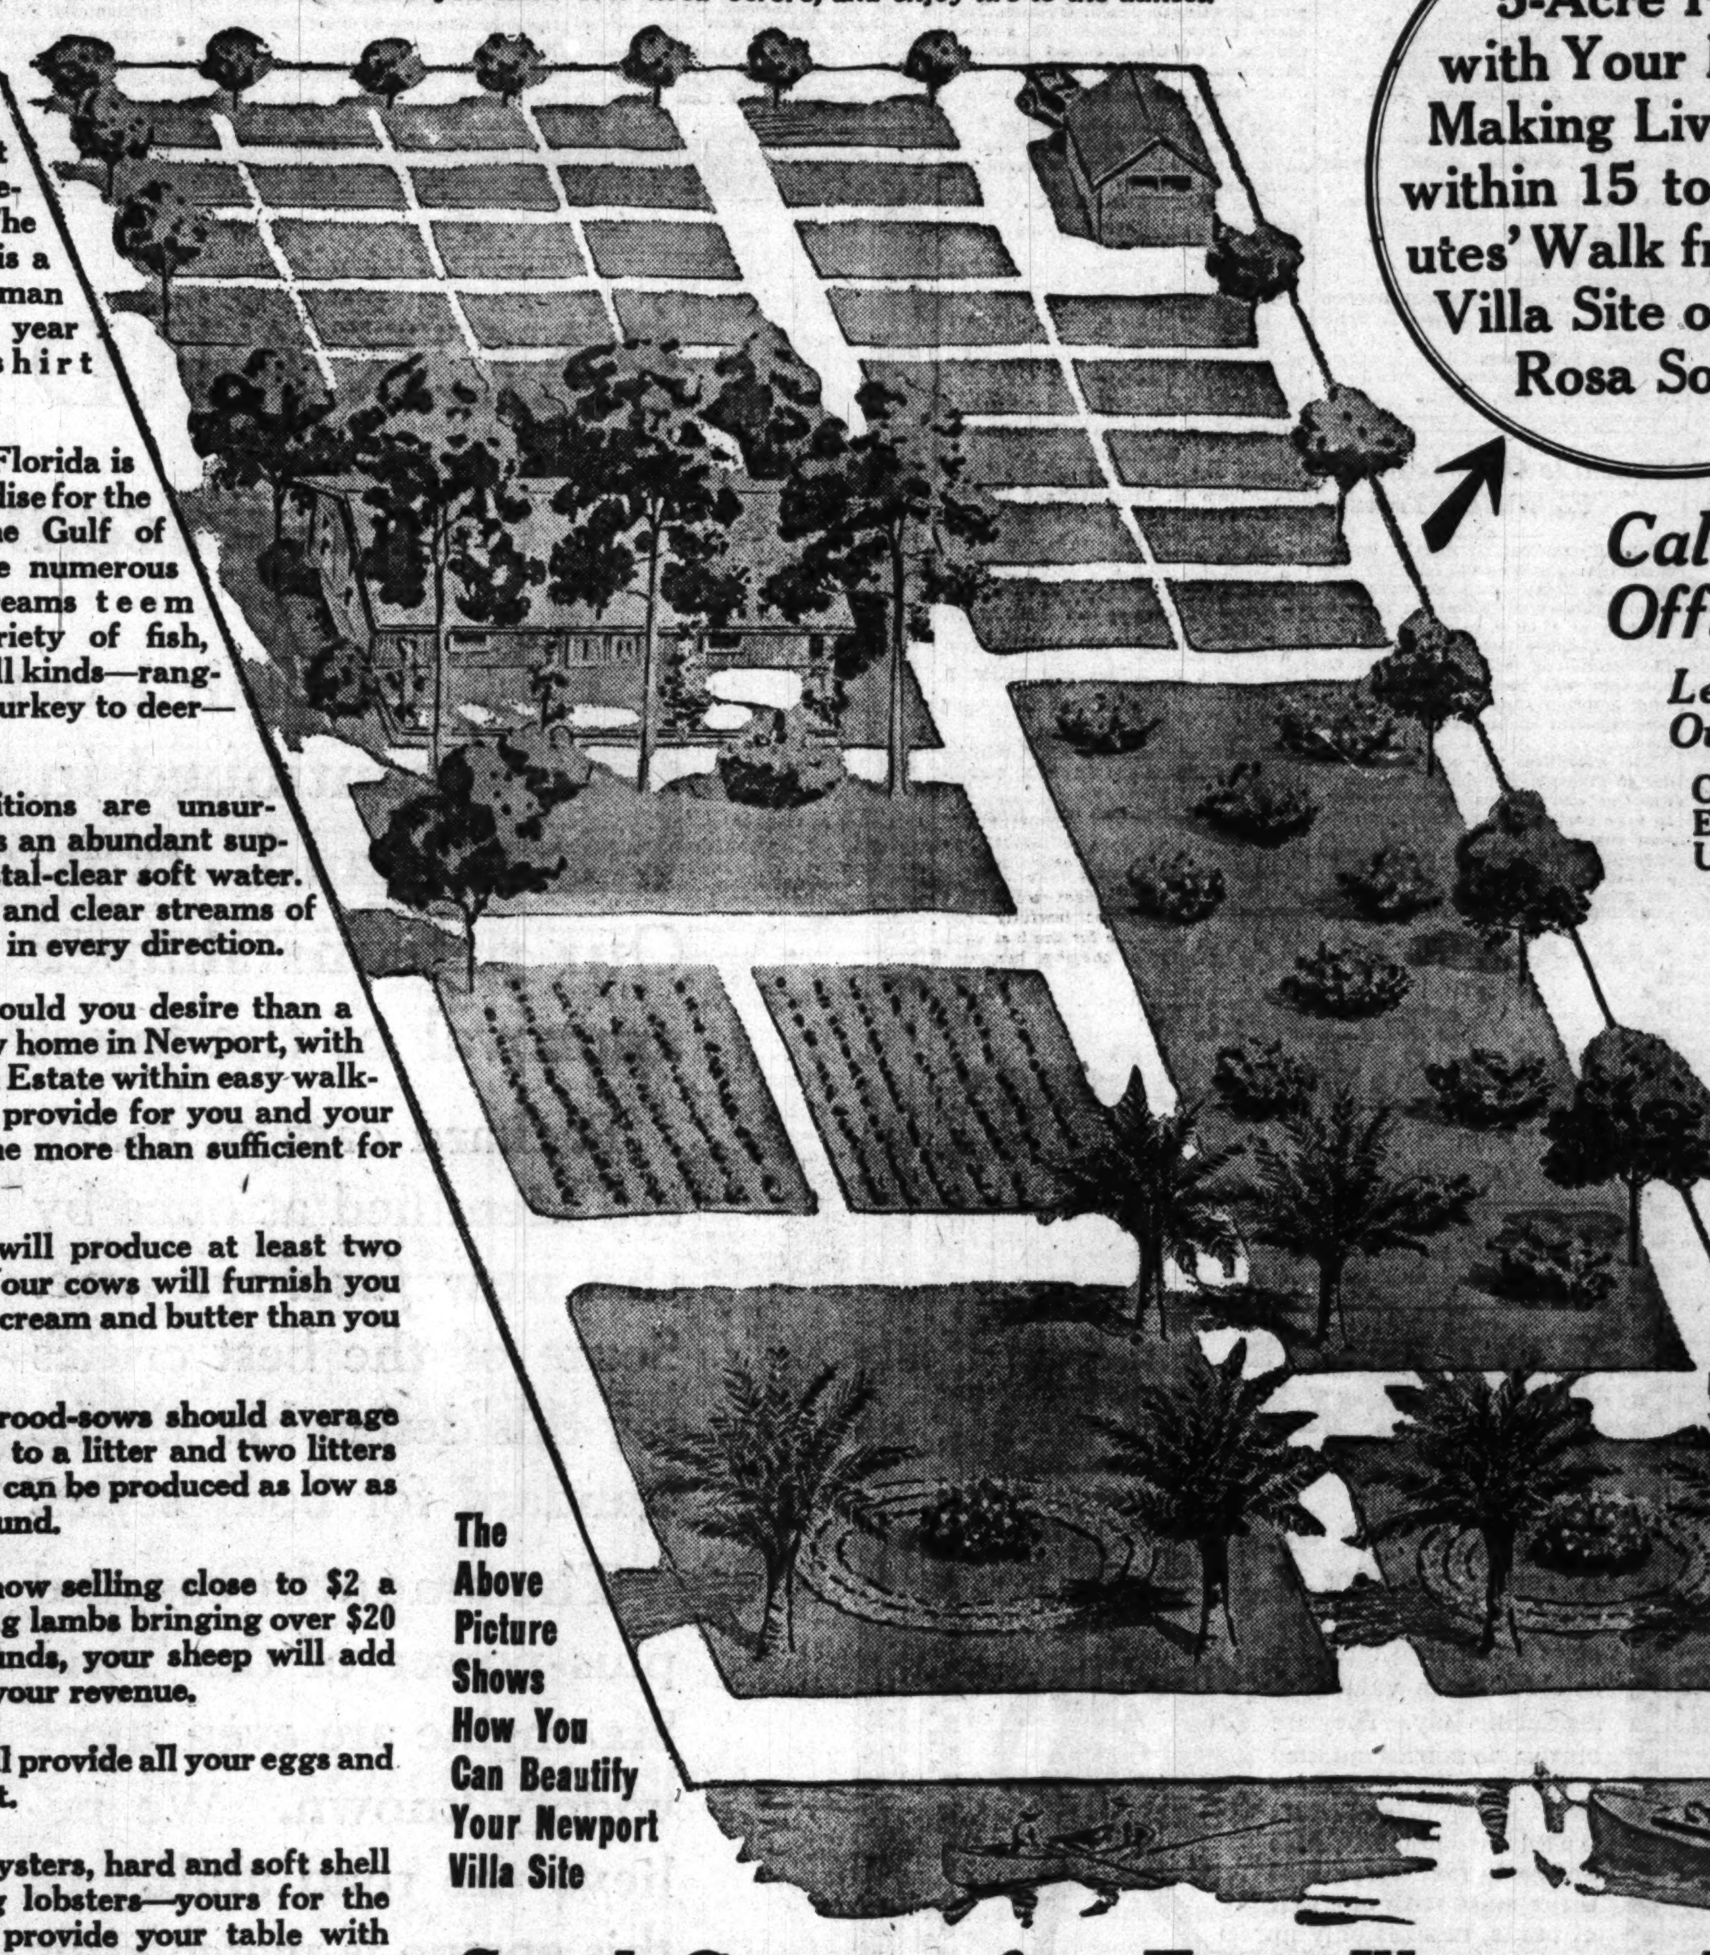
With wool now selling close to $2 a pound, and spring lambs bringing over $20 per hundred pounds, your sheep will add considerably to your revenue.

Chickens will provide all your eggs and part of your meat.

Fresh fish, oysters, hard and soft shell crabs and young lobsters—yours for the taking—help to provide your table with delicacies at all seasons.

Almost every variety of fruit—Satsuma oranges, berries of all kinds, grapes, figs, etc., grow readily and yield profusely.

While they're shoveling snow up North, you can pick strawberries for your Christmas dinner at Newport!



Your 5-Acre Farm, with Your Money-Making Live Stock, within 15 to 30 Minutes' Walk from Your Villa Site on Santa Rosa Sound!

PETITION FILING AT STATEHOUSE BREAKS RECORDS

Emmerson Able to Announce Only Congressional Candidates.

Springfield, Ill., July 13.—[Special.]—The order in which the names of the thousand and more candidates for the Illinois legislature will appear on the ballot will be announced tomorrow noon by Secretary of State Louis L. Emmerson.

All records for primary petition filings, established in the earlier days of the direct primary law, were shattered when a mass of petitions was dumped today in the secretary's office.

Mr. Emmerson was enabled last night to announce the list of candidates for congress and for the Republican and Democratic state committees and the order in which their names would appear.

Malone Leads Ticket.

First place in the Seventh congressional district, where the hardest primary congressional fight is anticipated, went to William H. Malone of Park Ridge, the neutral candidate for congress. M. A. Michaelson, former floor leader in the council for Mayor Thompson, went into second place, while Congressman Niels Juul gets third money. For state committeeman in the same district first place went to John P. Garner, the city hall entry. Emil J. Wentzlaff, backed by the neutrals, drew second place and William C. Eggert, the Deneen candidate, is in third place.

Congressional filings furnished a few surprises in the Cook county districts. Congressman Madden is opposed by James A. Scott, backed by Oscar De Priest. Congressman Wilson of the Third district got first place over Harry F. Atwood.

Britten Has Opposition.

Two candidates filed against Congressman Britten, who won first place in the Ninth district. They are Auguste C. Babize and John B. Skinner. Our old friend William Grant Webster who was the vice presidential candidate of the state of Oregon in 1916, shows once more as a condidate for congress in the Tenth district. Down state the only Republican contest that appeared was furnished in the Galesburg-Quincy district. Congressman Edward J. King gets first place and Charles F. Hurburgh gets second place against him.

Gallagher Faces Fight.

The chief surprise in the Democratic congressional filings was the petition of Frank W. Koraleski as a candidate against Congressman Thomas Gallagher in the Eighth district. This is understood to be an attempt of the Polish vote in the district to centralize behind a congressional candidate.

In the Springfield district L. V. Hill of Montgomery county, filed as a Democrat. Later former Congressman James M. Graham is expected to file as a Democrat.

The winner will attempt to defeat Congressman Loren E. Wheeler, who will be unopposed in the Republican primaries.

Three Sacks of Mail .

Three huge mail sacks dumped in the secretary of state's office at 8:30 o'clock this morning carried the primary petitions that were sent in by mail in accord with the regulation that had been established by Secretary Emmerson last week. Under the direction of A. C. Millspaugh, chief assistant to Mr. Emmerson, a big force of clerks worked all day in an effort to assort and list the candidates.

Because of the new primary law provision that requires rotation of names by senatorial districts of candidates who run in the state there was none of the usual strife for first place position by candidates for United States senator, congressmen at large, and state officers.

Three File for Senator.

However, petitions were received from Medill McCormick, George Edmund Foss, and William Hale Thompson for the Republican nomination for senator. Petitions were filed for Henry R. Rathbone, Richard Yates, and William E. Mason for the two Republican nominations for congressmen at large.

For state treasurer only the petition of Fred E. Sterling had appeared up to 4 o'clock. It became definitely known that George E. Keys of Springfield is not to be a primary candidate against State Chairman Sterling.

Magill to Be Candidate.

One of the lobby developments at the state capital in the crowd of politicians who were on hand with their petitions was that former State Senator Hugh S. Magill of Springfield is practically certain to be a candidate for superintendent of public instruction. His petition was not filed today, however, but is likely to be recorded early in the week.

So far as is indicated the contest between Mr. Magill and State Superintendent of Public Instruction Francis G. Blair will be the only fight staged for place on the Republican state ticket proper.

Long List for Legislature.

Because of the intense fight precipitated by the showdown between the wets and the drys over ratification of the federal prohibition amendment, the list of candidates for the legislature is to be the longest in many years. This is increased also by the three-sided factional fight between Cook county Republicans that, apparently, has been carried into each of the nineteen senatorial districts, and by the double-barreled Democratic contest between the Sullivan and the anti-Sullivan factions.

Tom Carey Signs Bonds for 'Mickey Finn' Suspects

Bonds of $2,000 each for seven of the ten waiters who were indicted in the "Micky Finn" powders case were signed yesterday by Thomas Carey, Democratic politician.

The men released are W. S. Wood, alleged manufacturer of the powder; Chester Buckley, Don Parker, John Gold, Lincoln Powers, John Mullian, and Fred McClain.

FOR CONGRESS AND STATE COMMITTEES

Primary Petitions in Order of Filing Announced at Springfield.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 13.—The complete list of primary filings for members of congress and for members of the state committees, the first details of the primary list to be completed by the secretary of state, was announced this afternoon by Secretary of State Emmerson in the order of the filing of the petitions.

Women to Open Loyalty Fight Here Tuesday

The Republican women's loyalty campaign committee will formally open its Cook county campaign work with a luncheon at the Hotel La Salle on Tuesday at 12:30 p. m.

Mrs. Fletcher Dobyns, chairman of the committee, will preside and the speakers will be Miss Harriet Vittum, Attorney General Brundage, and Congressman at Large Medill McCormick.

The committee was organized in order to give the Republican women of Chicago and Illinois an opportunity to take part in the primary and election this fall. It has decided to indorse the Brundage Cook county ticket and also the candidacy of Congressman McCormick for United States senator.

Places on Senatorial Committees Eagerly Sought.

The senatorial committees, each composed of three members, determine the number of legislative nominees which the political parties shall have on the ballots. 'LEAD US TO JOBS,' CHORUS OF FORD VOTE SWAPPERS

Even Democrats Dislike Autocracy Effort in Politics.

BY ARTHUR M. EVANS.

Jackson, Mich., July 13.—[Special.]—Here, in the official cradle of the G. O. P., the Republicans seem fond of the word "dictatorship" in dwelling upon the candidacy of Henry Ford as the Democratic pick for the Republican ticket for senator. The stock remark is that the "Vote Swappers' league" of Detroit is trying to operate as an "autocracy."

The ordinary rank and filers one meets express the view that the Democratic politicians of Detroit construe "politics is adjourned" to mean that the Republican party should be thrown into the hands of a Democratic receiver. The politicians supplement this by saying public jobs and the patronage are the back curtain for the Democratic play, and that the great hope of the Democrats is to ride into the local offices in the smoke of the flivver king.

One hears this line of comment quite generally in the southern tiers of counties. They talk at Kalamazoo, Battle Creek, and Albion in almost the same phrases as in Jackson.

Some Democrats Protest.

Incidentally, the protest against "interference" is apparently finding receptive ears among the Democrats. In all these cities, Republican leaders declared, some Democrats were declining to support Ford and that most of the country Democrats would refuse to go into the Republican primaries. Nathan E. Bailey, prosecuting attorney of Jackson county, who stood pat with the Republican party in 1912 and on the county ticket, ran 1,700 votes ahead of Taft, although he was defeated by a Democrat by twenty-three votes, named several local Democrats who were not for the Ford candidacy.

"As yet," said Mr. Bailey, "I have to find a single Republican who says he will vote for Ford. The Republicans here are all against him. They resent interference on the part of the Democratic vote swapping politicians. Even Democrats are saying they won't vote for Ford, as they don't consider him qualified for the place of senator. Osborn sentiment is growing rapidly."

J. G. Henley for Osborn.

Among the Democrats who are not for Ford is James G. Henley, publisher of the Square Deal, a labor publication, and former secretary of the Michigan Federation of Labor.

"Personally, I favor Chase Osborn, because he is entitled to it," says Mr. Henley. "There never has been the slightest doubt where Osborn has stood on industrial issues. He was a trail blazer for labor in its legislative reform. He forced the workmen's compensation act through a special session when he was governor in the face of a great opposition. I was the representative of labor at Lansing during that fight, and I know the tremendous odds against which Osborn fought. That's on conspicuous feature of Osborn—he never stops to think whether his action will make him friends or enemies. All he asks is, 'Is it right?' of course, Mr. Ford is to be commended for his $5 a day innovation, but the workmen's compensation act was urged by Osborn when reforms were in their incipiency. The older element among the labor leaders, who know his record as governor, are, generally speaking, for Osborn.

Kalamazoo appears to be strongly anti-Ford. "Ford can't win," says Sheriff E. R. Eaton. "The Democrats trotted him out as a vote getting proposition. The Democratic county officials here are circulating his petitions. They hope he will run for senator on the Democratic ticket.

PACKARD TWIN SIX

Announcement of Policy

THE Third Series Twin Six will be continued in response to public demand. It is essentially unchanged. Our patrons shaped this decision by their approval of the latest Packard.

Packard cars of today are identified at once by the new fuselage line. Some of the best critics say this design has set the standard for body styles.

The smoothness and plus-power of the Twin Six engine are even more widely known. We believe the road ability of this engine is matched by what we now offer in lines, finish and appointments.

It is true that war has cut down the number of good cars that can be built. And yet in war-time a good car is almost indispensable to the efficient man of affairs.

Every condition of the times sets a premium on cars of character and lasting worth.

20,000 Twin Six owners know the Packard as a mode of travel—assurance of swift and safe transportation over any road.

O. P. SLATES FARE EQUALLY WELL AT FILING

First Places on the Ballot Divided Among Three Factions.

The big fight for preferred places on official primary ballots ended yesterday—the first day for filing candidate petitions in the county clerk's office.

There was an avalanche of petitions, in all, on which were a total of 358. It took hours to sort them. The final summary showed that 179 candidates had filed for county offices, many filing more than one petition.

Republican factional slates fared similarly as far as first ballot places, except that the Brundage neutrals obtained a slight advantage, according to most of the political dope-

Battle of Slatemakers.

The early filings indicate that the primary contest is to be strictly a battle of the slatemakers except for the county commissioners' places. There was not a single independent candidate, Republican or Democratic, who filed for seven different county offices. The announcement made by County Clerk Robert M. Sweitzer to the effect that petitions sent by mail would be given first consideration and that the first petitions opened would be given preferred places in order did not deter many candidates from sending petitions in by messenger as well as through the mails. It took the clerk's office hours to sort out the duplicate petitions.

Strangely enough the "mail lottery" system of the county clerk resulted in giving each of the three Republican warring factions an equal division of the more important of the county offices as far as first place on the ballot is concerned.

Places Are Divided.

The Brundage neutrals drew first place for Henry C. Beitler for sheriff, Frederic R. De Young for probate judge, and Archibald O. Coddington for county superintendent of schools. The Deneen forces got Edwin K. Walker for county treasurer, Allan N. Carter for county judge, and John F. Devine for clerk of the probate court at the head of their respective lists. The Thompson ballot headliners included A. C. Metzger for county clerk, Morris Eller, clerk of the Criminal court, and Smoke Inspector William H. Reid for board of review.

In addition the Brundage faction drew first place for William McLaren for president of the county board. Chas. Krutchkoff and Charles Ringer, Brundage candidates for members of the board of assessors, drew first and sixth places, respectively, on the ballot. Thomas A. Boyer and Paul H. Wiedel, the Deneen entries, drew second and third places, while the Thompson pair of candidates were listed in fourth and fifth places for the ballot.

No Republican Files.

The only ballot place for which a Democratic candidate filed is president of the sanitary district board. Trustee James M. Dailey, who is running for reelection as trustee, also filed for president. No Republican petition was filed for the place.

In the case of the other offices, no Republican slate received any overwhelming advantage in the filings for the three sanitary district nominations. Ald. Harry E. Littler, Deneen candidate, headed the filing list, with Wm. J. Healy and Frank A. Vogler, Brundage men, second and third, respectively. Charles Vavrik and James P. Bowler, Thompson entries, followed with James L. Perry, Deneen. Alex N. Todd, Thompson; Walter G. Davis, Deneen, and Ald. Willis O. Nance, Brundage, were the remaining slate candidates in the order named.

Democrats Make No Change.

It had been expected by the Harrison-Hoyne-Dunne Democrats that there would be some changes in the announced regular Democratic slate, but the announced slate went to filing and first place without an erasure. It included a number of men who formerly were affiliated with the anti-Sullivan faction, among them being Anton J. Cermak for sheriff, Henry Horner for Probate judge, John A. Cervenka for assessor, Charles E. Reading for sanitary district trustee and Peter Reinberg, incumbent, for president of the county board.

The filings for president of the board indicate that there will be a hot contest for the Democratic nomination. Besides Mr. Reinberg, Thomas P. McGrath, an elevator operator in the county building, and Commissioner Frank Ragen.

Many for County Board.

There is a particularly big list of candidates for the ten Chicago county board places. Besides the ten slated candidates on the Democratic side there were thirty-five independent entries. Among them is "Battling" Peter Bartzen, former president of the

The Republican list is not so formidable, but it totals thirty-seven, in addition to the three factional slates of ten each.

Through a mistake former Ald. John N. Kimball's name was filed with Brundage slate names. He drew a desirable place, being No. 11 on the Republican list.

The first petition drawn from the box was that of Charles N. Goodnow, Deneen candidate for county commissioner. The second petition was that of County Superintendent of Schools Edward J. Tobin, Democrat. Peter Reinberg's petition was the next to see the light, and Frederic R. De Young's was the fourth.

The last petition filed was that of Frank Chyna, Democratic independent candidate for county commissioner.

The Thompson slate also was short candidates for county commissioners from the country towns. It was said at the Thompson political headquarters that no list had been indorsed, but that later individual candidates from the country districts would be given assistance by the faction headquarters. It was hinted that some of the independent candidates were Thompson entries.

No Socialist petitions were filed during the day. It was announced that they would be filed later.

WILSON LETTER FORTIFIES LEWIS FOR SENATE RACE

'Counting on You to Make Illinois Issue Clear,' President Says.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., July 13.—[Special.]—Senator Lewis of Illinois announced today his intention to become a candidate for reëlection and made public correspondence between himself and President Wilson on the matter.

Senator Lewis says he will enter the Democratic primary, but that he will not confine his appeal to Democrats in the election, but will appeal to all citizens regardless of party. He will go to Chicago next week to make his formal announcement.

Senator Lewis is also being urged by his Democratic colleagues in the senate to make the race. A petition to this effect was signed by every Democratic senator present.

The Pesident's Letter.

President Wilson's letter to Senator Lewis follows:

"My Dear Senator: I have heard with concern that you thought of not accepting a renomination for the senate and undertaking a campaign. I hope sincerely that if that has been your inclination, you will reconsider your judgment in the matter and undertake the race. We are counting upon you to put your usual spirit and energy into a campaign which I am sure will assist to make the issues clear in Illinois.

"WOODROW WILSON."

Senator's Reply Not So Terse.

In reply to the president Senator Lewis said:

"My Dear Mr. President: I am in receipt of your note, making personal request that I enter the race for the senate and become a candidate before the people of Illinois. I thank you for your expression of confidence and particularly am I grateful for the suggestion which your note implies of some reliance upon me.

"I reciprocate the hope you express that my going before the people of Illinois may make clear the issues. There never was a day so filled with such promise of great danger or great welfare to our American citizenship as this, the day in which our people are coöperating to bring about an era for the common good of mankind.

"With this issue I shall go to the people of Illinois upon no narrow distinction of name, Republican or Democrat, but upon the great, broad basis of a true democracy, so necessary if we would maintain our republican form of government.

Sure of Illinois' Loyalty.

"Knowing the people of Illinois as I do, I can assure you that when the issues are presented, the needs of our government understood, and the general fitness of public service and public servants analyzed and disclosed, they will return to you such agents and such aids as will fulfill the objects you have expressed from time to time in your memorable messages to the people, and especially to give you that assistance you have the right to expect in this hour, when Americanism, and all that it means to America and the world, is the issue before mankind.

"I can pledge you the sure devotion of Illinois, a state whose history of men and sacrifices is proof that there are no disloyal citizens in her citizenship and every Illinoisan a patriot.

"JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS."

H. C. OF L. CUT IN TWO BY 12,000 AT PUBLIC MART

Slaughter of Prices Takes Place on Northwest Side Corner.

Vegetables and fruit at a 50 per cent saving on prevailing market prices were the inducements that took more than 12,000 people out to the Irving Park public market at Elston and Central Park avenues yesterday.

Farmers from the surrounding country trooped into town at sun-up, their trucks and wagons loaded with potatoes, cabbages, onions, cucumbers, lettuce, carrots, and other market truck. Fruit growers came right along with them, carrying peaches, apricots, and plums.

In Two Divisions.

The produce men and the fruit sellers were not in competition. They are divided into two classes by the market authorities. None can sell fruit or vegetables that are not in season.

All day the crowds come, from 6 o'clock in the morning till last night, and the total sales were about $1,500. There were twenty-nine farm truckloads of vegetables and four trucks of fruits sold.

One man figured his total sales at $80, and he hold at a 50 per cent discount.

Comparison of Prices.

Here are some of the prices that prevailed yesterday compared with present retail prices, as quoted by Charles Zeigler, president of the Irving Park Public Market association:

CARROTS at three bunches for 5 cents, vs. 5 cents a bunch retail.

LETTUCE at three heads for 5 cents, vs. 5 cents a head retail.

POTATOES at 40 cents a peck, vs. 50 and 60 cents a peck retail.

CABBAGE at 10 cents a head, vs. 22 cents a head retail.

ONIONS, 8 cents for bunch containing three city bunches, vs. little bunch for 5 cents.

LIVE CHICKENS at 75 cents, vs. dressed chicken at $1.38 retail.

APRICOTS AND PLUMS sold at 45 cents a square and peaches sold at 15 cents a basket.

Carted in Baby Carriages.

The vegetables were carried away in vehicles of all sorts, from the family baby carriage to the limousine. A line of automobiles lined the streets for blocks around the market.

The market opens at 6 o'clock each morning, closes at noon, then opens at 3 p. m. and closes at 10 p. m.

SHRAPNEL

Twenty enlisted men from Great Lakes and eight others selected from the district at large will enter a training school for officers in Great Lakes station tomorrow, under the tutelage of Lieut. J. C. McReavy. Contrary to general rumor, civilians will not be admitted to this school.

It is expected many worshipers from over the country will be present to pray for victory in the public novena in honor of St. Anne in the Church of St. Anne of Brighton Park at Thirty-eighth place and California avenue on Wednesday. The novena is preparatory to the annual feast.

A girls' patriotic league is to be organized in the Cleveland school district, under the supervision of the Woman's Service league. The girls will drill weekly under the tutelage of Sergt. Frank B. Bingham.

Engineers Indorse Use of Water Meters

The council is to consider the ordinance at Wednesday's meeting.

'TRIBUNE' TO GIVE 526 WAR GARDEN MEDALS TO YOUTH

Only Juvenile Tiller Is Eligible; State Council in Plan.

In coöperation with the State Council of Defense, THE TRIBUNE offers to juvenile gardeners of Chicago attaining a credit marking of 80 per cent or better 500 beautiful bronze medals specially designed by its art department. In addition to these, there will be twenty-six TRIBUNE silver medals, issued as follows:

One each to the best boy and girl gardeners in each of the ten school districts, twenty in all.

On each to the best boy and girl gardeners in the parochial schools of the city.

One each to the best boy and girl gardeners in the high schools and academies and seminaries of the city.

One each to the best boy and girl gardeners in asylums and similar institutions in the city.

What the Medal Shows.

The medal depicts a TRIBUNE war garden surrounded by an allegorical representation of the elements which influence its consummation; sun, moisture, cultivation, and the graceful folds of the beautiful flag which impels our effort.

The contest is not limited to school gardeners. Any juvenile tiller of the soil who, by his or her own efforts, is growing vegetables at home or in a community garden, is eligible. It is necessary, however, that the name, address, and educational institution attended and the location of the garden by sent either to THE TRIBUNE Garden Editor or to the war garden committee of the State Council of Defense. If preferred, this information may be left with the usher, third floor, TRIBUNE building.

Council's "Record Book."

The State Council's "record book" will be issued to each registrant. A representtive of the woman's directing committee will make proper credit markings in the booklet.

At the end of the growing season the woman's directing committee will determine the winners of both the bronze and silver medals. THE TRIBUNE garden bureau reserves only the privilege of consulting and advising with them.

The complete organization of the local supervisors, the ward directors, and the committee on awards is now being compiled and will be published next Sunday.

SUGAR STARVED, SOFT DRINK BLIND PIGS COLLAPSE

Food Officials Aid the Army and Navy in Booze Fight.

Soft drink establishments in the vicinity of military and naval training stations suspected of being blind pigs are being closed through the medium of the United States food administration. The sugar supply of all such places is shut off and as soft drinks cannot be made without sugar, the proprietor finds himself forced to close.

Robert Stevenson Jr., head of the sugar division of the Illinois office of the food administration, is coöperating in this work with chiefs of police in the vicinity of Rockford, Fort Sheridan, Great Lakes and the Rantoul aviation field.

"Whenever a soft drink parlor or a place where ice cream is sold has a bad reputation or is accused of doing the least thing out of the way we force it to close by cutting off its supply of sugar," said Mr. Stevenson. "Sales of soft drinks are often merely a cloak for secret sales of liquor. A soft drink place must be clean, and must be just what it pretends to be, or it must close.

"In this way we have been able to shut some places that have bothered the military and naval authorities for a long time. We have asked the chiefs of police of Highwood, Waukegan and other places to keep us informed regarding any place that is under suspicion. A place at Rantoul, known as The Tavern, had such a reputation that guards were placed around it. We were able to close it. Morey's, at Rockford, was also closed through our action.

"Another new move is that there is to be no lemonade at picnics this year. This will be a chance for picnickers to show their patriotism by doing without this beverage and other nonessentials that formerly used up an enormous amount of sugar. The only exceptions will be picnics where the proceeds go to the Red Cross or some other similar war cause. Picnics arranged by big establishments, societies, lodges, etc., must do without drinks in which sugar is used. This will be their contribution toward winning the war."

A notable change is going on in the candy business, according to Mr. Stevenson. Pointing to the window of a candy store, he said:

"Look at that display and you will get an idea of what is going on. The windows are filled with nut covered confections in which hardly any sugar is used. The candy makers are using substitutes for sugar, almost entirely now. In this way sugar is saved, and the confectioners are not forced to close their shops and throw a lot of employés out of work."

40,000 SEE 3 WORLD WATER MARKS FALL

P. M'GILLIVRAY CLIPS RECORD FOR 220 YARDS

Buddie Wallen and Kruger Also Earn New Honors.

World Records
Perry McGillivray, 220 yards	2:21 2-5
Harold Kruger, 100 meters	1:17 1-5
William L. Wallen Jr., 440 yrds.	5:25

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

In the presence of 40,000 persons who lined the banks, stood on the bridges, or occupied places of vantage in the trees, three new world's records were established in the first day's events of the Chicago Athletic association patriotic water carnival yesterday in the Lincoln park lagoon.

The crowd, which was the largest that ever attended an amateur event in Chicago, saw Perry McGillivray, the great little swimmer of the Great Lakes naval training station, defeat Duke Kahanamoku of Hawaii by eight yards in the 220 yard event. The gathering also heard the announcer say that Perry's time was 2:21 2-5, which beat his own world's mark of 2:24 1-5, made in Honolulu in 1915.

Hawaiian Breaks Record.

Shortly after this event had been decided another world's record went by the boards when Harold Kruger of Hawaii swam 100 meters by use of the back stroke in 1:17 1-5. This lowered the mark of 1:20 4-5 made by Harry Hebner of the Illinois A. C. in the world's games at Stockholm.

The other mark which will go down as a record is the quarter mile straightaway, which was won by Buddy Wallen, formerly of the Hamilton club, but now in service at Great Lakes. Wallen stroked the distance in 5:25. There are no records in the books which show faster time, and Wallen will be credited with a new mark for the distance.

Dash Event to Kahanamoku.

McGillivray and Kahanamoku, who are meeting for world's short distance swimming supremacy, divided honors in their races yesterday. Perry, as expected, won the long sprint race, 220 yards, while Duke won the fifty yard event in handy fashion. In winning his specialty the Hawaiian swam the distance in :23 4-5, which was four-fifths of a second slower than the world's record held by himself.

Although both match races between the world's swimming stars were looked forward to with interest, the 220 yard event was the most interesting. On past performances McGillivray was known to have a slight advantage.

Cheers for All Contestants.

As the trio were taken to the starting point in the lagoon in a launch the crowd gave cheers for each of the great swimmers, but the sympathies of that great gathering were with the little bluejacket. There were cheers for his dusky skinned opponent, who knew he was to meet the best swimmer in the world over the distance.

As the trio drew away from the starting point Duke forged ahead and led by two yards at the end of the first hundred yards. Combs was five yards back of McGillivray and lost ground on every stroke. After the 100 yard mark had been passed McGillivray began to cut down the Duke's lead. He drew up gradually until he was on even terms when they had gone 175 yards.

Great Finish for Crowd.

From this point to the finish the crowd was given a thrill of swimming racing such as never has been seen in Chicago. Duke and Perry bent to their tasks with every ounce of physical energy in their makeups. In trying to swim faster Duke swam out of his course, while Perry swa mstraight as an arrow.

As the swimmers neared the finish platform McGillivry was leading by five yards when the 200 yard line was crossed. Taking one look to see he was swimming for his correct finish mark Perry cut loose, swam the last twenty yards as fast as he could, and touched the finish plank eight yards in advance of Duke.

Lane First to Hit Water.

After the swimmers were given an hour's rest they were called out for the 50 yard swim. Clarence Lane of Hawaii and Herbert Topp of the C. A. A. were added starters. After the customary warming up process of the visitors the contestants were ordered to their marks. At the crack of the pistol Lane was the first to hit the water, while the others were an instant slower. As the swimmers came to the surface Lane and McGillivray had a slight advantage when they began to break the water by their powerful double overarm strokes.

At the end of the first 20 yards McGillivray led by a scant yard with Kahanamoku second, and gained with every stroke. As the contestants neared the finish platform Duke forged to the front while the other swimmers were on even terms. During the short interval remaining Duke increased his

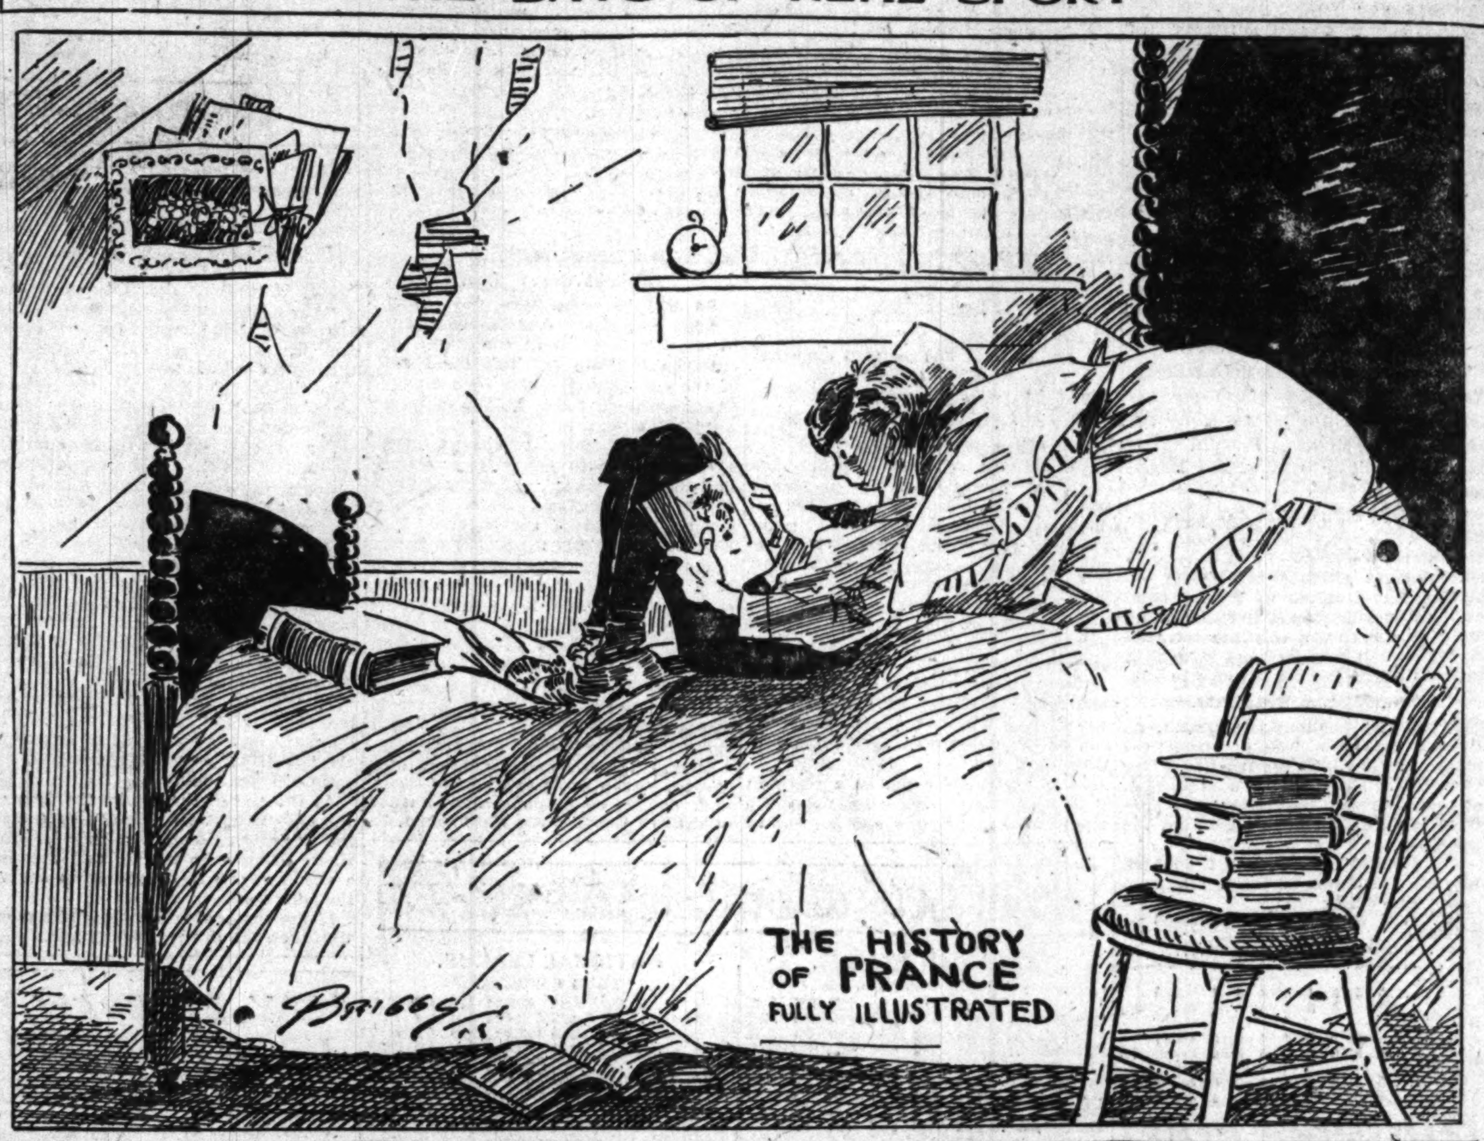
THE DAYS OF REAL SPORT



JOHN DEL SANTO AND JULES ARENS WIN BIKE EVENTS

John Del Santo of the Italian American Cycle club and Jules Arens of the Belgian American C. C. shared leading honors yesterday in the forty mile cycle race to Wheeling and return. Del Santo, aided by an allowance of twenty minutes, finished first in the grind. Jules Arens won first time prize, his mark being 1:49:43, while second prize in this division went to Jules' brother, Edward, whose time was 1:49:44.

There were nearly 100 entries for the run, which was the first serious attempt to revive road racing for the pedal pushers since back in 1901. Of the big list, fifty-five faced the starter, and forty finished. A great crowd gathered at California and North avenues to see the start of the race, which was directed by the Bicycle Dealers' association of Cook county.

13 Year Old Boy in Race.

Lester Mariner, a 13 year old kid, was the youngest starter, while J. W. Warnken, president of the North Shore Cycling club of Milwaukee, a veteran of 45 years, was the dean of the field. Warnken, with an allowance of twelve minutes, finished twenty-fourth.

The first race was run without a hitch. Everything ran true to schedule, and not a serious accident marred the program. Five or six falls resulted in minor bruises, but every one that took a tumble was able to remount and continue.

Former Stars as Officials.

Some of the cycling stars of other days acted as officials. Included among them were Tom Eck, Arthur Gardner, Augie Mertens, Billy Becker, Joe Skelton, Billy Brainbridge, Julian T. Fitzgerald, Willie Decardy, and Pat Skelton. Most of the above named were on Tom Eck's team at Garfield park track in 1896.

Fred Schlewitt, from the Franklin C. C., who has been so long in the game that he drew a twelve minute handicap, won both the time and place prize of the last big race of 1901. That was a 100 mile event, which he covered in 5:10 2-5. Yesterday he was second home, and covered the course in 1:53:33 for the last time prize.

The riders finished as follows:

1—John Del Santo, Italian-American C. C.
2—Fred Schlewitt, Franklin C. C.
3—Earl McIntosh, unattached.

In the Wake of the News
By RING W. LARDNER

THE EPISTLES OF EDNA.

Chicago, July 11.

Dear Mr. Graves:

No, sir, Mr. Graves, "ladies first" doesn't work in this case and you know there are "exceptions to all rules" and this is one of them and I would no more think of calling you by your first name before you had called me by mine than anything in the world and I think you're "mean" to ask me to. So there, Mr. Soldier Man!

Seriously, I don't like it a bit you calling me Miss Conklin and it sounds like you disliked me and for all I know perhaps you do as you have never said otherwise. But I wonder if you think of me as "Miss Conklin" or "Edna," that is if you think of me at all, which I don't believe you do except possibly when you receive my letters and then you probably say to yourself, "Oh, is that little f—l writing to me again?"

But shall I make a confession to you, Mr. Soldier Man? I never once have thought of you as "Mr. Graves" or "Corporal Graves" not even when I had only just met you and of course I couldn't think of you as "Warren," because I didn't know that was your first name until you told me. And now I suppose you will want to know what I did think of you as. Well, Mr. Curiosity, I won't tell you, but it begins with "D" and has just four letters. There, can you guess? But please don't try because I am afraid if you guessed right you would think I was a perfect little "it."

But I won't have you say that Warren is a crazy name, because it is not a crazy name and I think it's a dear name and I have always been crazy about it, and I think its a very queer coincidence that your name should be that. But perhaps I would better explain myself or you will think I am perfectly crazy. Well, then, every night going home on the L I buy a paper just to read the story that is in it every night about the married life of Helen and Warren. Have you ever read any of them? Of course I don't suppose you have, being a "mere man."

Well, its just little every day incidents about the every day life of a young married couple and I think it's really wonderful and you know how it is sometimes with a book or a story, how you unconsciously begin to think of yourself as one of the characters in them? Or haven't you ever done anything so silly and are you laughing at me for suggesting such a thing? Well, Mr. Graves, I will have to admit I have done it, and in regards to this story too, and then to have your name be Warren, well, it seems perfectly weird.

Now I suppose you are perfectly disgusted with me and saying to yourself: "Why, that crazy little it!" Because it might sound like I was thinking of "married life" in connection with you and I who hardly know each other. Please, Mr. Graves, don't think I mean it that way, but I guess would better not try and explain myself or I would be getting in deeper and deeper all the time. So please forget I said anything about it and don't think I'm a little f—l.

But do you know you are the first man I ever knew named Warren, that is, with Warren for a first name, because I have known people whose last names were Warren, but I never cared for it one way or the other as a last name. But I have always been crazy about it for a first name and just to think that the first man I ever knew named Warren should be you! And even now I can't call you by that name because I simply will not be the one to "start." But you can't keep me from thinking of you by your first name, so you might just as well "make the best of it." You see I can be stubborn when I want to, like some "other people" I know.

Where is that picture you promised me? You needn't to think for a minute, Mr. Soldier Man, that I am to be put off with any excuse like you haven't any pictures of yourself. You can have some taken and I insist on you doing it, so there! Now you see what a little tyrant I can be when I want to and I suppose you will say: "Thank heavens she is not my wife." But I am not really like that, Mr. Graves, and if I was—but I would better stop before I say something I will be sorry for.

Good-bye for this time and don't forget the picture and write to me soon—Warren. (There! Now who is the brave one?)

500 HORSEMEN IN DRAFT NET

Cincinnati, O., July 13.—[Special.]—Nearly 500 horsemen alleged to have been without draft cards were caught in the United States government dragnet at the Latonia track late today on the last day of the Latonia race meeting. The arrests were made by the Covington city police, federal secret service men, draft officials, and the Kenton county (Ky.) sheriff, J. H. Northcutt, and his deputies.

The visit of the officials, a small army in themselves, came without warning and demoralized the big Saturday afternoon crowd. Between fifty and sixty were sent to the Covington jail as the first batch.

The Red Cross profited to the extent of $60,000 on the meeting just closed.

BASEBALL HELD AN ESSENTIAL PURSUIT

NEW YORK, July 13.—Baseball was classified as an essential industry under the work or fight order by a local draft board in East Orange, N. J., in deciding today an appeal by Joseph Finneran, pitcher for the New York Americans.

Finneran was notified by the board that since he could support his wife and child better by playing baseball than in any other way he could remain with his team. His classification in the draft was 4A.

BAKER REVIEWS PLAYER'S APPEAL ON DRAFT ORDER

Washington, D. C., July 13.—[Special.]—Secretary Baker today took up for final consideration the question of whether the draft "work or fight" order applies to professional baseball players. The secretary announced this afternoon that he had reached no decision. He is giving thorough consideration to the question because his ruling may decide whether the big leagues will be able to finish their 1918 schedules.

The case was brought before Secretary Baker as a test in the appeal of Eddie Ainsmith, catcher of the Washington American league club, from the decision of a local board which ordered Ainsmith to engage in a useful occupation or lose his deferred classification.

Brief Drawn by Clark Griffith.

Clark Griffith, manager of the Washington club, prepared a brief in Ainsmith's case, which was filed with Secretary Baker. He urged that Ainsmith and other baseball players given deferred classification are not seeking draft exemption, but insist they have the same right as men in other occupations to retain the deferred classification given them by draft boards.

From the standpoint of the public Griffith argued in the appeal, baseball is an essential industry.

Ainsmith was given deferred classification on the ground of having dependents.

League Dead; Players O. K.

Salt Lake City, Utah, July 13.—When draft age members of the Vernon club of the Pacific Coast league responded to summons today before a local draft board to show cause why they should not engage in work essential to the conduct of the war or be placed in class 1A of the selective draft the board decided to not examine them in view of the fact that the club was about to disband.

A showing was made that the members of the team were engaged in essential occupations when the baseball season ended and the board decided that no hearing was necessary and dismissed the summons without making any record of the cases.

Gallia Gets Draft Call.

Philadelphia, Pa., July 13.—Pitcher Bert Gallia of the St. Louis Americans today received word from his local draft board in Texas to show cause why he should not be placed in class 1 under the work or fight order of the provost marshal general. He has dependents and has wired his father to file the necessary papers.

Bob Geary, one of the dependable pitchers of the Philadelphia Athletics, today was called into the national army by his local board in Cincinnati. He did not claim exemption and left for home tonight.

Told to Go to Work.

St. Paul, Minn., July 13.—Pitcher Hagerman of the St. Paul club was notified by his draft board today to engage in some "useful" occupation or be placed in class 1.

Army or Work.

Minneapolis, Minn., July 13.—Catcher Coleman of the Minneapolis club today was given his choice by his draft board of finding "useful employment" or being placed in class 1.

RUSSELL STOPS TRIPLING RUTH AND WINS, 5 TO 0

Reb Holds Slugger Hitless and Sox Pound Bush.

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Boston, Mass., July 13.—[Special.]—Reb Russell not only stopped battering Babe Ruth today, but he stopped the entire Red Sox team and shocked all Boston and its suburbs. Chicago's champion White Sox went over in championship style, beating the flying Hub town crew, 5 to 0, and it was largely because of the steady and clever pitching of the Chicago southpaw that the trick was turned.

Reb allowed the locals seven scattered hits, not one of which was delivered by the powerful Mr. Ruth. Every time the big fellow came to bat the crowd of 8,000 fans cheered and waxed enthusiastic, for it has been a habit of his to break up games for their delight and mental relaxation. Even in the ninth inning, with Boston five runs behind and no one on base, the crowd cheered the big fellow just as if it might have been possible for him to deliver one master drive that would tie the count.

How Reb Stopped Babe.

Just what Reb handed the champion long distance swatter is not known. It looked as if he mixed up curves, fast ones and slow ones with strategic designs, aiming to catch the slugger off his stride. Anyway, there wasn't a real solid blow hit by Babe.

Twice he died on bounders down the first base line to Risberg. Once he hit one to the sky and it came down in Murhpy's hands, and once when Reb had him with the call of two strikes and one ball, he served up a dandy big curve that made Ruth step back and then bent right down over the heart of the plate for a third strike.

Russell Never in Trouble.

At no time was Russell in distress, and his mates backed him up beautifully. In the eighth the first two men got on, one by a hit and one by an error, and immediately Dave Danforth began warming up with all his might, but in a jiffy the boys had turned a double play, so Danforth went back and sat down.

Joe Bush was on the rubber, and though he seemed to have the old time bullet speed, the Sox took a liking to the stuff he was throwing. At least they swatted it vigorously a dozen times and would have scored more runs except for a couple of double plays, which cut off big openings.

Sox Get Start in Fifth.

It was the fifth before they counted, and then they had some help. Weaver and McMullin singled and Jacobs hit into what should have been a double play, but Ruth let the ball get away on his end of it and Weaver got home.

In the sixth the Sox proved their right to the victory when singles by Liebold, Risberg, and John Collins, with the aid of a bad throw by Agnew, scored two runs, and in the seventh Russell himself poled a double to right with one out and scored on Murphy's single. Singles by Risberg and Weaver, with J. Collins' out sandwiched in between, got the final run in the eighth.

COBB WILL QUIT AFTER THIS YEAR

Washington, D. C., July 13.—Ty Cobb will quit baseball at the end of this season until after the war. He said so today when he dropped in at the White House to see some of his friends about the executive offices.

"At the end of this season I'm going to do my duty to my country in the best possible way. I love the game, but next season will see me out of it for the period of the war."

Cubs and Braves to Play Game at Montreal July 28

Montreal, Que., July 13.—Arrangements were closed today to have the Chicago and Boston teams of the National league play here July 28. It will be the first major league game ever played in Montreal, and, if financially successful, it is understood a series of games between major league teams will be played here during the season.

THROUGH THE EDITOR'S SPECS
By HARVEY WOODRUFF

THE patriotic water carnival conducted in Lincoln park lagoon by the Chicago Athletic association is one of those affairs which might advantageously be held more frequently by civic or semi-civic bodies for the entertainment of the masses.

The attendance yesterday was limited only by the number of vantage points on which spectators could sit, stand, or cling. Just how the larger crowd expected today will be handled is a perplexity to Supt. Cannon of the Lincoln park system, which extended effective coöperation to the C. A. A. in its ambitious plans.

The expense of such events is nominal in comparison with the number of people entertained; there is no question of taking man power from war work and, possibly best of all, there is absolutely no admission charge to the public.

The public parks and the lake front offer excellent facilities for athletic spectacles. Perhaps this carnival may be the forerunner of others of a similar character.

While boxing is enjoying greater popularity and encouragement than ever before in the history of the country, professional exponents of the sport are finding difficulty in securing a spot where the authorities will permit a title or near title test.

The boxing enjoyed by thousands of persons is enjoyed by soldiers in our army and navy, or by civilians who are close enough to cantonments or naval stations to attend bouts in which our active fighters are participants.

Boxing has taken a firm grasp as an army sport. It is approved by the highest military officials, who give visual evidence of this approval by attendance at army and navy bouts. When the war is over, this sentiment undoubtedly will have notable effect in lessening the long standing prejudice against pugilism.

While the big war is on, however, the public as a whole sees little need for battles between stellar professional lights. That accounts for the opposition which prevented the contemplated Willard-Fulton bout and is making difficult the path of promoters for the proposed Fulton-Dempsey bout. Bouts between lesser lights are tolerated, but comparatively few report financial success.

This condition is not surprising. Boxing for pleasure or amusement is one thing. Boxing only for the money realized is hardly an essential.

The ruling powers in baseball evidently have experienced a change of heart in their attitude toward continuing baseball. Whether or not they have received an official hint from Washington is conjectural. Whereas formerly they were quoted as saying that a word from those in authority would close their gates, they now talk of their duty to keep baseball alive.

It is even suggested that in 1919 club rosters be cut to twelve men, with games scheduled only for Saturdays and Sundays as an amusement for the people, with necessary postponements played off on week days.

Baseball is an amusement to many millions of people. If it can be continued in some form without vitiating the "work or fight" principle and without sacrificing any of our man power from war work, club owners should be commended for facing the inevitable losses in keeping it alive.

Meanwhile official decision on the "work or fight" rule, as applied to 1918, is eagerly awaited. Many individual hardships will follow immediate enforcement of the order.

SPORT HEROES SEEK "Y" WORK

New York, July 13.—Jack McAuliffe, who retired from the ring holding the world's lightweight championship, is included among seventy-five men who have volunteered here for work as physical directors with the American expeditionary forces, according to announcement by the Young Men's Christian association tonight. Other recruits are Tom Sharkey, former heavyweight; Walter C. Carter, who pitched for Yale, and William Roper, one time Princeton football star.

Herbert L. Pratt, chairman of the overseas recruiting drive, declared 100 men capable of leading soldiers in outdoor play are needed at once.

PATER VAUGHN LACES BRAVES IN 5 TO 3 GAME

Allows Two Bingles Until Last Round, Then Eases Up.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Although Boston's Braves had a union pitcher on the job yesterday the Cubs had little difficulty winning the final game of the series by a score of 5 to 3.

Boss Stallings of the intruders pitted Hugh Canavan against Big Hippo Vaughn. The Brave hurler is only an apprentice as yet, but he pitched a sturdy game considering the hopelessness of the cause which he espoused. Pater Vaughn was stingier than a bachelor miser for eight innings. In that time the Braves were allowed only two hits, one of which was an infield scratch. But that scratch followed one of Vaughn's three passes and eventuated in a tally with the help of a couple of outs.

Cubs Pole Ten Hits.

The Cubs pecked away at Canavan's curves quite regularly and tagged him for ten safeties and five runs in eight rounds. Their best attack was made in the eighth, when three solid shots netted the two runs by which the victory was cinched.

With that lead of four under his belt Pater Vaughn let his mind wander to Little Hippo in his perambulator, and the Braves took a mean advantage of the fact to start a drive that produced two runs in the ninth and for a time looked worse than that. The enemy had the tying tallies sprouted on the base paths with only one out in that spasm and that out was a corker. In fact, it was the game's feature defensively. Wickland led with a terrific wallop over left center. Paskert gave chase more desperately than the situation called for at the time, and after a long run finished with a brilliant catch of the ball as it came over his shoulder.

Smith Gets Freak Homer.

Smith followed with a freak home run, which grew out of an ordinary two bagger over third base, because the pill filtered through a partly opened gate in the steel fence that bounds Les Mann's land. Koney, pinch pitcher of the day before, ripped off a single. So did Henry and likewise Maranville, scoring Koney.

That left only two runs margin and the two runs were on there. So Big Hippo brought his mind back to the ball park and stopped the drive. A roller by Wilson, who rapped in place of Canavan, forced out Henry at third and Rawlings was set down with three strikes.

Flack Scores After His Triple.

Flack opened on Canavan in the first with a triple to the stand in left center and Hollocher scored him with a single. Mann and Merkle flied and Hollocher was pinched stealing. Killefer went over the top for the second Cub run with a single in the third. Vaughn whiffed and Flack fouled out, but Hollocher was punctured with a stray pitch and Mann mauled a single to right, on which Killefer registered. Merkle walked, filling the bases, but Paskert's hit was wrecked by Canavan, who diverted it just enough to let Maranville field it.

The Braves counted in the fourth on a pass to Herzog, followed by Massey's scratch hit to Hollocher, Wickland's out at first, and Smith's long fly to Flack.

They went along with the Cubs in front 2 to 1 till the seventh. Zeider's walk and a double by O'Farrell scored one for us before anybody was out. Vaughn whiffed again and Flack popped out, but Hollocher walked and Mann stung a single to right. O'Farrell tried to score on it. Wickland's throw was wide of the plate, but Canavan caught it and relayed to Henry in time to nip O'Farrell.

Merkle's single, Paskert's sacrifice, and singles by Zeider and O'Farrell counted two in the eighth, and they were needed, as later events proved.

GOLFING STARS CONTEST TODAY FOR RED CROSS

Evans and Hagen Tackle Hutchinson, McDonald at Edgewater.

Red Cross Golf

Place—Edgewater Golf club.
Location—Pratt and Ridge avenues.
Players—Evans and Hagen vs. Hutchinson and MacDonald at 3 o'clock.
Routes—L road to Morse avenue; No. 1 car on Clark street to Pratt boulevard; Western avenue car to grounds.

BY JOE DAVIS.

After many wanderings on foreign strands on Red Cross missions, Charles Evans Jr., national amateur and open champion, will return to his home fireside at Edgewater Golf club to aid in keeping the home fires burning. With him will come Walter Hagen, formerly of Rochester, but now of the Oakland Hills club of Detroit.

This pair of homebreds, two of the greatest golfers this country has produced, will meet Jock Hutchinson of Glen View, patriotic open champion, and Bob MacDonald of Indian Hill. The Scotch combination has lost only one match in two years, although Evans and Jim Barnes tied them in the recent match at Lake Shore Country club.

Hagen Former Champion.

Hagen has been seen twice in championship matches in Chicago, winning the national open event at Midlothian in 1914, when he finished one stroke ahead of Chick Evans. Last year at Westmoreland in the western open event he finished second to Jim Barnes. In 1916 at Milwaukee Hagen won the western open title with a card of 286.

It would not be possible to pick two better teams and from every viewpoint the match is one of the best of the season. President Harry N. Hosick, Chairman E. R. Moore, and other officials of the club have worked hard to make the match a success. The jackie band and the Great Lakes sextet will entertain through the afternoon and at night.

Lieut. Flachaire, the French flying ace, will give an exhibition, and Bob MacDonald will contribute some favorite Highland tunes on the bagpipes. An Overland car will be raffled and 200 women members of the club will sell souvenir programs.

J. J. Healy as Auctioneer.

Former State's Attorney John J. Healy will auction the caddy privileges.

The club is located at Pratt and Ridge avenues and can be reached from the city in thirty minutes by automobile. The nearest station on the "L" road is Morse avenue, from which the club is reached by walking two blocks south to Pratt boulevard and then west to Ridge. The No. 1 car on Clark street runs by Pratt boulevard. The Western avenue car runs by the western boundary of the grounds.

'PROS' WIN OVER EVANS AND WOOD AT PITTSBURGH

'Chick' Plays Well, but Pal Takes Only One Hole; Take In $10,000.

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 13.—[Special.]—Jock Hutchinson, the Glen View professional, and Walter Hagen of Rochester, N. Y., former national open champion, defeated Charles [Chick] Evans Jr. of Chicago, national amateur and open title holder, and Warren K. Wood, also of Chicago, former western amateur champion, in a four ball match at the Pittsburgh Field club today for the benefit of the Red Cross, 3 and 2.

More than $10,000 was collected from various sources and this sum is the largest obtained in the east for the Red Cross.

Evans' Caddy Pays $1,000.

The caddying auctions netted $2,600, Harney Barney paid $1,000 for the privilege of carrying Evans' clubs; the Hutchinson privilege brought $600, and the privilege of Wood and Hagen each went at $500.

There had been a last day substitution in the players for the match, Hagen taking the place of Jim Barnes as Hutchinson's partner and Wood replacing Bob Gardner as Evans' partner. Wood was noticeably off his game and was able to win only one hole, the eighth, and it was his poor form that made it impossible for his side to win.

Evans Plays Brilliantly.

Evans was brilliant throughout, although evidently "stale" from too much golf in his strenuous Red Cross campaign. He bore his burden well, at that, and with some real assistance from Wood might have pulled out the match.

The determining factor in the match was the steadiness of the professional pair. The cards:

FLOSSMOOR CLUB PRESIDENT DIES AFTER OPERATION

Thousands of local golfers will learn with regret of the death yesterday afternoon of Clyde C. Paddleford, president of the Flossmoor Country club. He was a charter member of the Calumet Country club and later joined Flossmoor, where he served as treasurer and director for several years before becoming president. He was treasurer of the Western Golf association in 1914, 1915, and 1916 and in that capacity met many golfers from other cities.

He died yesterday at his residence, 4546 Oakenwald avenue, from an infection of glands in his neck, for which he underwent several operations. He was 49 years old and was born near Tuscola, Ill. Funeral services will be held at his late residence tomorrow afternoon.

BOY OF 17 WINS STATE GOLF MEET

Excelsior Springs Mo., July 13.—James Crawford Ward of Kansas City won the Missouri state golf championship today, defeating R. W. Hodge of Kansas City, 3 to 1, in thirty-six holes of match play.

Ward, who is only 17 years old, played brilliant golf, and state tournament followers conceded the closing day's play was one of the most remarkable in the history of the event. Each of the finalists did the first eighteen holes in 77, two strokes under the score made by the tournament medalist, Dr. Paul R. Talbott of Springfield, in the qualifying play.

Hodge had his opponent 1 down at the turn, but Ward evened the round by taking the eighteenth hole. He improved his play on the last eighteen, which he made in 75, equaling the course record held by Charles [Chick] Evans of Chicago. Failure to sink a putt for a four on the last hole, which he made in four in the first round, prevented him from establishing a new course record.

MISSOURI TITLE TO CAROLYN LEE

Kansas City, Mo., July 13.—Miss Carolyn Lee of Kansas City became woman golf champion of Missouri today when she defeated Miss Gladys Cranston, also of Kansas City, 3 and 1, in the title match of the fourth annual state tourney. Miss Lee took the lead at the start and retained her advantage practically all of the way.

Garfield Tourney Open to All Cook County Golfers

The Garfield Golf club will stage its annual open tournament at Garfield park this week, play starting on Wednesday with a qualifying round at eighteen holes. The first and second rounds will be played Thursday and the semi-finals and finals on Friday.

The tournament is open to amateurs and professionals residing in Cook county. A trophy has been donated by the Daily News, which will go to the player winning it three successive seasons. There will be a medal for low qualifying score.

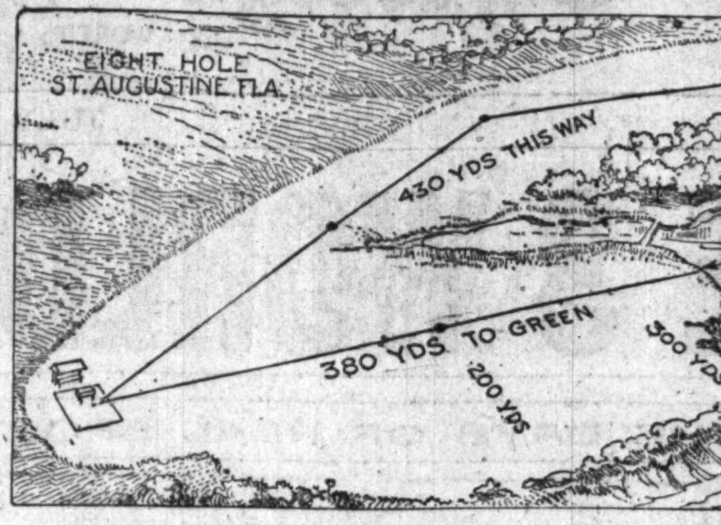
Teams from the Lincoln Park, Marquette Park, Garfield Park, Jackson Park, and Austin Golf clubs will leave this morning to compete in the public parks tournament at Elgin.

SOCCER MEN MEET THURSDAY.

The annual meeting of the Illinois State Football association will be held Thursday night at the Great Northern hotel. The election of four delegates at large, forming the divisions for next season, and other important matters will be discussed.

ST. AUGUSTINE HOLE PLACED IN O'NEIL GOLF COURSE

Picturesque Setting with Trying Test for Real Golfers Basis of Choice.



BY GEORGE A. O'NEIL.
[Lake Shore Country Club.]

THE city of St. Augustine, Fla., has many claims to attention. It is the oldest permanent settlement of the white race in the United States, and its picturesque remains have joined with its mild and equable climate to attract seekers for pleasure and health.

But neither Pedro Menendez de Aviles, who first sighted the land there on St. Augustine's day, Aug. 28, 1565, nor Sir Francis Drake, who captured the fort in 1586, foresaw that the city would gain an added distinction from being in this series of articles.

Tee Near Fort Marion.

The old golf course in St. Augustine has been played over by thousands and is too well known to require description. One of the tees is built up in a corner of the old Spanish Fort of San Marco, now renamed Fort Marion in honor of Gen. Francis Marion. The gunners who pointed their cannon from near the site of this tee seem to have had good "control," for the fort, though often attacked, was rarely captured, but, according to Jack Croke, who was located there for several seasons, many a golfer has beaten himself at this same spot by driving into the ocean.

St. Augustine's claim to a place in this series, however, rests upon the eighth hole of the new course—one of the best golf courses in Florida. Donald Ross is the authority responsible for presenting this claim. He does not propose this as his choice of a two shot hole, but as the best hole of unique character that still demands golf of the highest class.

Just an Ocean Arm.

As will be seen from the sketch, a small arm of the Atlantic ocean cuts in sharply in front of the green and runs back along the left hand side of the course, making a very formidable hazard for the hooked tee shot or a topped second.

The sketch shows two ways home: a distance of 380 yards for a strong and confident player, and a distance of 430 in the long and safe journey around the end of the hazard. The long route will cost the player a bogey five, but the short way home calls for a very long tee shot, not merely to insure the player a safe journey across the water on his second, but in order to put him near enough to use an iron on his second, so as to hold the green, which is well fortified in the rear to catch an overplayed shot. There is also a group of trees to the left which tightens up the green considerably.

During the tournament last winter Walter Hagen made this hole in three, and, not to be outdone, Jim Barnes duplicated the feat the next round.

GOLF QUERIES

Question—Please advise me how to play an approach with a back spin.
B. L. T.

Answer—The effectiveness of the pitch shot is due to the amount of back spin put on the ball. The back spin is caused by striking the ball sharply below the center as the club is traveling downward. This cannot be done properly without taking turf under and ahead of the ball.

In addressing the ball, the player faces toward the hole, but the face of the club is directed well to the right of the line of flight. On the back swing the club leaves the ground immediately and goes back and up with a bend, as well as a roll of the wrists, in order to gain a sharper arc in the swing.

On the forward swing the club is snapped downward with a speedy throw, and, as it takes the ball, is brought well to the left of the line of direction. The amount of cut put on the ball will depend on the position of the club face in striking the ball and the speed of the stroke.

The direction of the ball will be determined by the facing of the club to the right and the amount of stroke to the left. The line of flight will lie exactly between the two.

At the end of the stroke the face of the club is upward. The ball must be hit sharply, because it travels the whole distance in the air and because a sharp stroke is necessary to secure the back spin.

If mastered, this stroke is the most useful stroke in the player's bag.

PLAY BASEBALL UP TO TRENCHES ON WEST FRONT

Washington, D. C., July 13.—Baseball promises to become through the agency of the war an international sport, according to Harry R. Stringer of the war department commission on training camp activities, who has just returned from making a survey of recreational and relief facilities among the American overseas forces. He accompanied Raymond B. Fosdick, chairman of the commission.

"It really takes a trip to the front to make one realize that baseball is the national game of America," Stringer said today. "I saw our boys playing from London to Paris right up to the front line trenches. Most of the units have their own teams, and in some places leagues have been formed.

"Rivalry is keen and the men take as much interest in the fortunes of their respective nines as they do in the big league races at home."

Sunday Adds 'Psalm 34' to Autographed Baseballs

Rochester, Minn., July 13.—Billy Sunday, in his room at St. Mary's hospital, today autographed six baseballs to be used in the Red Cross benefit game Sunday between a Rochester team and an aviation school team.

On one of them he wrote "Psalm 34." Turning to Mrs. Sunday, he added: "I guess I'd better write that psalm number on all of 'em, Ma. It might cause some geezer to read the Bible."

The balls, with Billy's signature, will be raffled off after the game for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Cincinnati, O., July 13.—By winning both halves of a double header, 3 to 1 and 8 to 2, Cincinnati made a clean sweep of the series of five games with Brooklyn, which has not won a game on the local grounds this season. In the first game Brooklyn outhit the home team two to one, but could not bunch its hits off Eller until the ninth, when it scored its one run on four consecutive hits. Cheney was wild, all three of the Cincinnati tallies being due to bases on balls.

In the second game Grimes was hit hard. Schneider, showing a tendency to wildness, was relieved in the fifth, and Regan was effective the rest of the way. Cincinnati made only one error in the five games. Scores:

FOUR RUNS IN THIRD GIVE YANKEES SHADE OVER CLEVELAND, 4-3

New York, July 13.—New York again defeated Cleveland, 4 to 3. The Yankees bunched four hits on Coumbe with two Cleveland errors in the third and did all their scoring. Pratt's batting featured. He made four hits in as many times up. With Cleveland men on third and second in the ninth and only one run needed to tie, Pipp ended the game with a sensational one handed leaping catch on Johnston. A freak feature of the game was the fact New York only made three assists.

The two clubs will play at Cleveland tomorrow, a September game having been moved forward. Score:

Notes

Philadelphia today.

The Phillies are due next for a series of four games, which does not include any hangover double headers.

Maranville was given a pass in the seventh and raised a laugh by doing a jackie hornpipe on his way to first base.

The Cubs gained another half a lap on the Giants, who broke even with Pittsburgh. That means six and a half games lead for the north siders.

Government officials made another roundup of Cub fans looking for possible slackers, but found few who had forgotten their classification cards, so the exit of the crowd was not inconvenienced.

Indications are the White Sox will attempt to get some help from players turned loose because of the windup of the Pacific Coast league tomorrow. Manager Rowland is looking into the matter.

O'Farrell spelled Killefer behind the bat after the fourth inning and rolled up a batting average of 1.000 for the day by peeling off a double and single in two times at bat. He tried to stretch his second hit into a two bagger, but was nipped at second by Wickland's throw.

Manager Mitchell had two rookie pitchers under observation before the game. They were Napier, late of the Shreveport team of the defunct Southern association, and Reynolds, who used to pitch for the Peoria team when there was one.

Charley Hollocher has been given permission by his draft board to take his physical examination here, which will not necessitate his leaving the team unless he should be called in the draft before the season is over. As he is in the newest list of registrants, he will not be called until the old class 1 is exhausted.

NOTES

Boston, Mass., July 13.—[Special.]—Tomorrow will be a couple of days of rest for the Sox.

Dave Danforth will serve some more southpaw stuff to Mr. Ruth in the final game here on Monday.

Swede Risberg is doing some swell stick work while subbing for Gandil. He poled three singles today in four times up.

Ray Schalk was on the field in uniform with his injured finger taped, but may not catch for two or three days yet.

Joe Jackson and Claude Williams made a brief call on the White Sox last night, as they were in the harbor on a test trip with one of Uncle Sam's ships.

The weather was bad, a cold wind coming off the bay and carrying with it a regular Scotch mist. Rain seemed likely at any time after 10 o'clock, but in spite of it a good crowd was present.

Liebold turned a neat play in the eighth. Bush was on second and Hooper on first with none out when Shean hit a hard drive to deep left. Liebold made a pretty catch, then, seeing Bush had run almost to third, he followed with a perfect peg to E. Collins in time for a double play.

CAMP GRANT HURLER GIVES FAIRIES 1 HIT, BUT BELOIT WINS, 1-0

Beloit, Wis., July 13.—[Special.]—Hearn of the Fairbanks-Morse team and Sullivan of Camp Grant staged a pitchers' battle today. Sullivan let the Fairies down with one hit and struck out eleven, but he lost his game, 1 to 0. Hearn gave four singles and none of the soldiers got beyond first base.

The local pitcher gave no passes, while Sullivan issued two, and one of these cost him the ball game. Allison walked to open the seventh and scored on Perring's double to right, the Fairies' lone blow. Buster Keene was elevated to the cleanup position for the locals today and celebrated by striking out three times in as many times up. Score:

Notes of the Swim

The barges used for seats were fittingly decorated with flags of the allies.

After he had won the fifty yard race Kahanamoku danced the hoola hoola in his dressing room, but would not give a public exhibition.

The women's events attracted a lot of attention, especially the high diving, in which Mrs. H. T. West of Butler house made the best and most difficult dives.

Martin Delaney, physical instructor of the C. A. A., has general charge of the tourney, and, as usual, ran off the show in a masterly style. Seventeen events were decided in two hours and eighteen minutes.

Dr. John B. Kaufman, athletic officer at Great Lakes, who was one of the timers, enjoyed McGillivray's victory as much as any one except Perry's mother, who was in one of the side stands.

Police who patrolled the course and who have worked for the park system for years were unanimous in the opinion it was the largest crowd they ever saw in the park to witness a show of any kind.

Nelson N. Lampert, president of the C. A. A., who saw the show from start to finish, said it was a great meet and that he will do his utmost to have such an event held each year under the auspices of the Cherry Circle club.

Ensign Jack Kennedy of Great Lakes helped announce the results. It did not take long for the crowd to recognize Jack's voice, and he was given a hand several times when he accommodated persons who asked for results a second time.

Buddy Wallen was helped in his record breaking performance in the 440 yard swim by a jackie bugler. When Buddy was within hearing distance of the finish line the bugler sounded the call for chow. Wallen, who always is one of the first in the mess halls, put on extra steam and the call may be partly responsible for the record.

NYMPH HONORS TO MISS DUNNING IN LAKE CONTESTS

Forty young women took part in the open swim held under the auspices of the Edgewater Beach hotel in the lake yesterday. To Miss Barbara Dunning went high honors with two first places. She won the 220 yard swim with ease, pulling far ahead of the field with a powerful crawl stroke and took another victory in the fifty yard back stroke, but by a close margin in the best event of the day.

Miss Lillian Miller was tied for second honors with Miss Helen McNulty. The latter won the fifty yard swim and was second in the 100 yard event, and Miss Miller scored a victory in the breast stroke and was second in the 220 yard swim. Miss Jacquin Thompson, who won the 100 yard swim, and Miss Amber Meath, who led the fancy divers off of the twelve foot board, were the other first place winners.

Frank Mack, the new swimming instructor at the hotel, had charge of the meet. Tom Robinson, Northwestern university coach, R. W. Warnock and Frank Dwyer were the officials.

lead to a yard when he touched the finish plank, while Topp won second place by a touch from Lane, who nosed out Perry by the same margin for third place.

Wallen Never Forced.

Wallen's record breaking performance was the more noteworthy when the fact is taken into consideration he was not pushed. The other contestants in the race were Laubis of the Great Lakes and Scherer of the C. A. A. Shortly after the start Wallen pulled away from the field and had to make his own race. He did this in faultless fashion, swam in a direct course, and finished strong.

The fifty yard race for women was won by Miss Frances Dittman, a promising swimmer who represents Independence park of Irving Park.

Ryerson Relay Team Victor.

The relay team representing Ryerson school, which won the honors in the grammar school division of THE TRIBUNE's playground athletic meet, won the grammar school relay from Emmett school, the only other contestant.

Today's program, which starts at 3 o'clock, should be just as interesting as yesterday's. The Hawaiians will compete in several contests, with Duke swimming 100 yards against the fastest opponents obtainable. Summaries:

One of General Pershing's Veterans

How to make a Soldier happy

Suppose you were in an American Training Camp. Suppose you had just come in from a long hike to find that the "Mail-man" had left you a fine box of Owls or White Owls. You'd know you had a real friend, wouldn't you?

So why not send your "Soldier-in-America" a box of Owls or White Owls? Or better still, why not send him a box regularly—every so often. You couldn't pick cigars that would give more real dependable pleasure—first pop out of the box—or last. And why? Because the dependable fragrance of Owl and White Owl is guaranteed by a leaf-reserve always worth nearly $2,000,000.

TWO DEPENDABLE CIGARS

REMEMBER 1906? HERE'S DOPE ON OLD SOX HEROES

You Can Get By as an Old Time Fan if You Save This Yarn.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

One member of the White Sox team which won the world's championship for Chicago in 1906, Nick Altrock, still is actively engaged in the game, two others are connected with it in official capacities, and a third was a major league manager a few weeks ago.

Lee Tannehill, who covered short in the battle against the Cubs twelve years ago, played with the Dallas team of the Texas league this year. The Texas league died last Sunday. Doc White, the musical southpaw, was secretary and part owner of the same team. Frank Isbell, whose four two base hits in one game featured the 1906 series, is owner of the Wichita club of the Western league.

Fielder Jones, who piloted the White Sox to that victory, handled the St. Louis Americans up to the middle of June, when he resigned to devote the rest of his life to his timber and oil investments.

Two Still in Chicago.

Two of the 1906 world's champions are residents of Chicago. They are Louis Fiene, pinch pitcher, and Hub Hart, who helped Billy Sullivan with the backstopping. Only one of that team is dead, and that is Jiggs Donahue, who played first base in all six games.

The twenty-one players who constituted the "hitless wonder" outfit have twenty-five children living, some of whom may become illustrious ball players after the war. Pat Dougherty, now an oil magnate in Bolivar, N. Y., and Tay Towne, a stock farmer in Iowa, lead the team with four children apiece.

Here's the Dope.

The dope on the Sox of 1906 as registered with Louis Heilbroner, publisher of Baseball's Bluebook, is as follows:

ALTROCK—Nick has made a reputation as a comeback pitcher for the Washington team this year. During the winter months he is the foreman for a Washington corporation. He is married and lives at the capital.

DAVIS—George ended his professional career with the White Sox in 1909. For the last six years he has been the baseball coach for Amherst college. He is married and lives in St. Louis, where he is selling automobiles and trucks.

DONAHOE—J. [Jiggs] died July 19, 1913. He was manager of the Galveston club at the time of his death.

DOUGHERTY—P. H. [Pat] retired from the White Sox and professional ball at the close of the 1911 season. He has made a fortune in the oil business. Pat has been owner of his home club and also president of the Interstate league for several seasons. Bolivar, N. Y., is his home. He has four children—James, age 12; Helen, 8; Edward, 5, and Mary, 3 years. His favorite sport is hunting and fishing.

DUNDON—Gus was with the White Sox until 1908. Retired as a player after winning the pennant for the Olean Interstate league club in 1916. He lives at Pittsburgh and is engaged in the electrical welding business. Married and has three children, two boys, 16 and 18 years, and one daughter, 15 years old.

FIENE—Louis was a member of the White Sox until 1910. He is employed by the Western Electric company of this city. Married and lives at 301 East Fifty-sixth street. He still plays with local semi-pro clubs.

HAHN—Edward retired from the game May 25, 1917, as a member of the Wichita club. Is in the cigar business at Des Moines, Ia. Married and has one son, Donald, 18 years old.

HART—J. H [Hub] quit the game Sept. 25, 1910, as a member of the Utica club. He is managing a billiard room in this city and lives at 1506 Hyde Park avenue. He has one son, John Jr.

ISBELL—Frank is owner of the Wichita club. He retired from the White Sox at the close of the 1909 season, having worked under Comiskey for thirteen years. He is married. James, age 10 years, is an only child.

JONES—Fielder recently resigned as manager of the St. Louis Browns. He is interested in the lumber business at Portland, Ore. He is married and has one child, Cecil, 16 years old.

McFARLAND—Edward retired from the game in 1909 as a member of the Boston Red Sox. He is in the real estate business at East Cleveland. He is a bachelor and also a thirty-second degree fan.

O'NEIL—John [Tip] retired as a member of the White Sox at the finish of the 1906 season. His home is at St. Johns, N. B., where he has been employed as a sailor. His friends have not heard from him for four years.

OWEN—Frank played with White Sox until May 10, 1910. He is married and employed in the transportation department of the Ford Motor company at Detroit.

PATTERSON—Roy is with the Minneapolis team, making it his twentieth year as a professional pitcher. He served under Comiskey for nine years. He lives at St. Croix, Wis., and is the owner of the only truck and dray company of that city. He is married and has two children, Norman, 15, and Marion, 7.

ROHE—George retired from professional ball at the close of the 1914 season as a member of the Richmond, Va., club, to engage in the photograph business in Cincinnati. He is married and has one child, Alice, 13.

SMITH—Frank was a member of the Brooklyn Feds at the time that league disbanded. He lives in Pittsburgh and, with his brother, is owner of a transfer company. He is married. Frank Jr., 15, is an only son and a promising player that may some day be a member of the White Sox.

SULLIVAN—W. J. [Billy] retired May 26, 1917, as a member of the Seattle club. He is owner of an apple farm at Newberg, Ore. He is married and has two children, Joe, 11, and Billy Jr., 7.

TANNEHILL—Lee played with the Dallas, Tex., club. He is married. Lives at South Bend, Ind., and sells groceries during the winter months.

TOWNE—J. quit the game in 1915 as manager of Norfolk, Va., club. He owns a stock farm at Spencer, Ia. He is married and has four children—Alice, 17; Edith, 13; Alegra, 7, and Virginia, 3.

WALSH—Ed was released by the Braves during the last winter. Is married and living at Meriden, Conn. He is playing the outfield for the Marlin Arms team of New Haven.

WHITE—George H. [Doc] was part owner and secretary of the Dallas club and is living in that city. He is married and has two sons, 15 and 7.

CHICAGO CLUB TEAM CLOSE TO TITLE BY WINNING NET MATCH

BY GEORGE SHAFFER.

Chicago Tennis club practically landed its second successive city championship in team tennis yesterday by defeating the chief contender, South Park Tennis club, 7 individual contests to 2, at Chicago. The team battle was the crucial one of the season in division A of the Chicago Tennis association.

The same two teams fought it out for the title last season, when Chicago was sectional winner for the north side and South Park for the south side. This year division A includes only one section.

The hardest fight that developed yesterday resulted in South Park's only victory in singles, Harold Forster beating Don Wiley, the Evanstonian who plays with Chicago, 7—5, 4—6, 6—2. Both played snappy tennis, Forster in particular being accurate in placing.

Kenfield Wins Long Match.

John Kenfield of Chicago and Benny Adler of South Park engaged in a marathon pingpong duel, which the former won, 12—10, 8—6. In doubles J. P. Benson and George J. O'Connell, South Park's kid star, upset W. S. Miller and Erwin Gut, an experienced doubles combination of the home club. A mixup in scheduling resulted in the last doubles match going to Chicago by default. Summaries:

Singles—Edward Oelsner [C.] beat J. P. Benson [S. P.], 6—3, 6—0; W. S. Miller [C.] beat Lee R. Campbell [S. P.], 6—2, 6—4; Harold Forster [S. P.] beat D. F. Wiley [C.], 7—5, 4—6, 6—2; John Kenfield [C.] beat Benny Adler [S. P.], 12—10, 8—6; Erwin Gut [C.] beat Harry McCullough [S. P.], 6—2, 6—3; Ed Spear [C.] beat H. A. Pinney [S. P.], 7—5, 6—2.

Doubles—Ed Oelsner and Ed Spear [C.] beat Lee Campbell and H. Forster [S. P.], 7—5, 6—0; J. P. Benson and G. J. O'Connell [S. P.] beat W. S. Miller and Erwin Gut [C.], 5—7, 7—5, 6—3; John Kenfield and D. F. Wiley [C.] won by default.

HAMILTON PARK [1] AT SHERWOOD [8].

Sherwood's division A team administered a decisive defeat to Hamilton Park, 8 to 1, at Sherwood. The park team was on the verge of a shutout when Hamilton's last hope, a doubles team new to league play, took the court and by a gallant uphill fight wrested victory from Sherwood. W. L. Titus and J. M. La Pointe composed the team which saved the visitors from being whitewashed. Summaries:

Singles—J. F. Day [S.] beat A. C. Neilson [H. P.], 6—2, 5—7, 6—3; R. G. England [S.] beat P. A. McCaskey [H. P.], 6—2, 6—4; W. S. Hillis [S.] beat Harry Holbrook [H. P.], 2—6, 6—2, 6—4; G. L. Brannen [S.] beat Edwin McKay [H. P.], 6—1, 6—1; O. O. Sheline [S.] beat C. E. Wilson [H. P.], 7—5, 6—4; Fred Fischer [S.] beat Cook [H. P.], 6—2, 6—0.

Doubles—J. F. Day and R. G. England [S.] beat A. C. Neilson and P. A. McCaskey [H. P.], 6—2, 6—2; W. S. Hillis and O. O. Sheline, [S.], beat Harry Holbrook and Lawrence [H. P.], 6—4, 9—7; W. L. Titus and J. M. La Pointe [H. P.] beat H. K. Griffith and Gallison [S.], 1—6, 6—4, 6—2.

SOUTH SIDE [5] AT RIVER FOREST [4].

All but two of the matches in South Side's invasion of River Forest developed into stern struggles, the exceptions being the No. 1 event, in which Tom Cochran took A. E. Pitcher out of form, and the last contest in doubles, which was defaulted by South Side in order to get home. Pitcher, who was one of the best players in the league in former seasons, did not begin this season with River Forest's team, and is playing tournament tennis without much practice, due to the team's call for talent. Summaries.

Singles—T. H. Cochran [S. S.] beat A. E. Pitcher [R. F.], 6—0, 6—4; F. T. O'Brien [S. S.] beat H. R. Hamilton Jr. [R. F.] 6—4, 6—2; D. W. Westervelt [S. S.] beat F. G. Davis [R. F.], 6—1, 7—5; A. J. Austen [R. F.] beat B. K. Engel [S. S.], 6—4, 3—6, 6—3; C. V. Zeller [S. S.] beat A. MacFarlane [R. F.], 6—4, 7—5; G. W. Gale [R. F.] beat J. A. Farley [S. S.], 10—8, 2—6, 11—9.

Doubles—T. H. Cochran and D. W. Westervelt [S. S.] beat A. E. Pitcher and F. G. Davis [R. F.], 8—6, 6—4; H. R. Hamilton and A. J. Austen [R. F.] beat F. T. O'Brien and B. K. Engel [S. S.], 3—6, 6—4, 6—4; G. W. Gale and A. MacFarlane [R. F.] won by default in doubles.

Division B

W. MAYWOOD [4] AT UNATRE [5].

Unatre just about accomplished its long sought championship in division class B of the Chicago Tennis association, beating the sixth of its seven team rivals, West Maywood, by 5 to 4 at Unatre yesterday. The home team was without W. S. Berns, its star, who was married last Tuesday and refused to permit tennis to interrupt his honeymoon. Unatre plays one more opponent, Rogers Park, next week, but by all the laws of dope seems a certain winner. Summaries:

COACH JOE PAUPA QUITS DE PAUL

Coach Joseph G. Paupa of De Paul academy and university teams, whose prep football elevens in six years met defeat only three times, yesterday resigned as coach at De Paul. He is considering the possibility of taking charge of football work on the collegiate scale. Paupa has had correspondence with several institutions.

Joe began his athletic career on North Division High school elevens in 1901 and played there four years on the same teams with Wallie Steffen, Leo De Tray, Tubby Graham, Roy Rennecker, Charles Schott, and Ed Hill. He was Notre Dame varsity tackle in 1905 and 1906 and also competed on track, basketball, and water polo teams. He coached at Chicago Latin school before going to De Paul.

In his six years in charge of De Paul prep sports Paupa's team won five basketball titles in the Catholic league, five baseball pennants, and in the last scholastic year cleaned up the Catholic league sports in every division except baseball.

ST. PAUL CLUB DROPS PLAYERS.

St. Paul, Minn., July 13.—Manager Mike Kelley of the St. Paul club tonight announced that he is trimming his roster to get within the player limit of sixteen men. Bobby Byrne, infielder who recently was injured, was unconditionally released. Pitcher Bill Piercey, Catcher Lester Cook, and Outfielder Robert McMenemy are to be disposed of.

For PLAYERS of WHIST by A. R. METCALFE

DESCHAPELLES, the great French player, said of a deal at whist: "Every single faculty of the mind, one by one, is successively engaged in the operation; every class of mental agency and every shade of intelligence are in some degree called into action, and the continual change in the faculty employed prevents too laborious exertion of intellect, keeps up the excitement to the end, and produces the highest degree of pleasure."

The above is by no means a description of the mechanical game which is generally seen. Players with a thorough knowledge of the rules and years of experience may be deadly as partners.

The deal which follows is intended to illustrate the difference between ordinary play and the real article:

West secured eight tricks only.

At the conclusion of the deal the declarer remarked, "I thought north had the king of diamonds, but I had to win that finesse to get nine tricks. Just my rotten luck!"

He really had all the luck that should ever be given one person.

In the first place he should have ignored his hundred aces and supported the spade bid by east. Spades promised a certain game and probably a better score than no-trump.

Having the wrong declaration he should still have made game. These are some of the points he should have noted.

After north had played two spades that player was marked with at least one of the missing kings or he could not have supported his partner's bid.

When north discarded a heart at trick four he was marked with at least three hearts originally, as he must keep one to lead to his partner. His failure to discard another heart indicated probably but one remaining.

When south discarded the deuce of diamonds it was unlikely that he held the king; the discard of a second diamond made this almost a certainty. At this point west should have begun to look for his ninth trick in the heart suit instead of in diamonds.

When south discarded a heart at trick six he was counted for four hearts, one diamond, and two clubs.

West should have led a diamond at trick seven and put up the ace, then led ace and another club.

RING KNIGHTS DO REAL "BIT" FOR WAR CAUSE

Boxing Shows Net Large Sums for Army and Navy Camp Funds.

BY RAY PEARSON.

Has it occurred to the average person what the boxers of the country are doing to help bring about the downfall of Kaiser Bill and the Hun horde? There are mighty few boys in the service or out of it who haven't forgotten the business of getting the coin in order to give their services to the greater cause of democracy.

Soldiers and sailors are not the only representatives of the fistic art who are doing their bit with the gloves to show their patriotism. One only needs to hark back a few days ago to the patriotic boxing tournament staged at Cleveland, O., which drew an array of the most wonderful boxers in the world. In the list of performers there was one champion of the world and one who claims to be titleholder in another class and who has as good a claim to that honor as anyone else. Then besides these of renown there were a score of others who have placed their names in the hall of pugilistic fame.

No Coin for Fighting.

These ring stars were asked if they would be willing to go to Cleveland and box for the benefit of the soldiers' athletic equipment fund. Did they dodge the issue? They did not. They were informed that they were to receive nothing for their services. What would have happened if a regular promoter offered them nothing to fight? The list included Featherweight Champion Johnny Kilbane of Cleveland, Charley White of Chicago, lightweight; Joe Burman, Chicago, bantamweight; Harry Greb, Pittsburgh, middleweight; Rocky Kansas, Buffalo, lightweight; Cal Delaney, Great Lakes Naval Training station, lightweight; Ted Lewis, Briton, welterweight; Willie Jackson, New York, lightweight; Johnny Dundee, New York, lightweight; Matt Brock, Cleveland, lightweight; Johnny Griffiths, Akron, welterweight.

Furthermore they were informed in advance that the bouts were not to be exhibitions. They were to be fights.

Proceeds Around $12,500.

To the average boxer fighting is one thing and exhibiting another. Any of them are willing to go on in exhibitions, but when it comes to fighting most of them size up the financial returns before deciding to take a chance. In this case there wasn't any need of figuring on whether they were likely to be handed a trimming. They either had to be patriotic and come across with their services or be unpatriotic and find a loophole through which they might escape appearing.

The result of this patriotic carnival of fights is shown by the fact that $12,500 was gained for the athletic equipment fund, which is a mighty nice sack of coin.

Grant Show Brings $14,000.

Then we have another example of the boxing fellows helping out war funds in the big boxing competition between boxers of Camp Grant and a Canadian camp on July 4. Another nice piece of money—over $14,000—was taken in through the efforts of these boys. Nearly every one of the seven men who represented the cantonment at Rockford is a professional scrapper now wearing the khaki in the interests of the United States.

The class of Camp Grant men was demonstrated in every bout of the seven, it being necessary for the referee to call a halt to save Canadian fighters from a knockout. On the Camp Grant team are such scrappers of reputation as Middleweight Eddie McGoorty, Heavyweight Andre Anderson, the big Chicago Swede who has fought nearly every big man in his class; Johnny Ritchie, Chicago bamtamweight, who isn't to be sneezed at by any of the banties for the simple reason that he's so tough they can't stall off his rushes; Walter Jacobsen, another Chicagoan and a lightweight who is a pretty smart chap with the mitts.

To have every bout stopped to prevent a knockout is unique, and besides it shows these boys were fighting, not sparring.

ROAMER EQUALS TRACK RECORD

Empire City Racetrack, N. Y., July 13.—Running the mile and a furlong in 1:51, time that equaled the track record, Andrew Miller's Roamer won the Empire City handicap today. It was just a gallop for the old champion, which finished ten lengths ahead of A. K. McComber's Hollister. Spur, last year's winner, was third. Ticket, who was coupled in the betting with the winner, was last in the field of four. This was the fifth time in a row that Roamer has tried to win this event and the first time that he succeeded.

Valparaiso Army Camp Stage Big Athletic Meet

Valparaiso, Ind., July 13.—[Special.]—The Valparaiso army camp staged ten athletic events today. D company won the five inning indoor ball game. Lowry of Council Bluffs, Ia., ran the one-fourth mile in 1:07 and the half mile in 2:48. Sergt. Haft of Company D put the shot 29 feet 11 inches. Hasman jumped 5 feet.

Companies D and C won the two tugs of war. Fahndrich ran one mile in 6:22. Brown won the hundred yard dash in :11 3-5. Wilson of Minneapolis in the standing broad jump covered 8 feet 8½ inches. Holder of Company C in the running broad jump made 17 feet 8½ inches.

Woods and Waters

by LARRY ST. JOHN

MIDSUMMER TROUTING.

TROUT streams the country over have reached that stage described by the words "settled down" and as the water becomes clearer and lower the trout fisher's problems increase.

The angler who fishes with flies must use his head more and his good right arm, strong and true, somewhat less, as he must now reckon with that combination, bright sunshine and gin clear water. To cast with reckless abandon over a shallow spot with the sun shining so as to make the shadow of one's leader on the bottom appear an inch wide, is not going to result in much more than exercise and casting practice.

The vacationist, having two weeks or so to get the lust for trout out of his system, will probably follow the custom of bass fishermen and angle mostly in the cool of the morning and the fag end of the day and just loaf around the rest of the time and invite his soul.

The week ender, however, who must make each golden moment pay a dividend in trout, or possibilities of trout, will utilize every wile of the craft to add heft to his basket—that is, if he is after trout instead of merely trout fishing.

On a bright mid-summer day one must be careful to keep himself and his equipment as inconspicuous as possible. Lumbering up to the edge of a pool in heavy wading shoes and fishing from a high bank is poor strategy.

To fish a pool with worms, get in the water above and roll your worms down on the bottom with the aid of a few split shot. If snags are plentiful you will have to keep off the bottom and then a spinner and worm is advisable, which combination is, incidentally, a prime favorite for fishing fast water among the natives of many trout regions. A small spinner of the type known as the Colorado usually adds to the attractiveness of a worm. This spinner not only whirls itself, but it also revolves the hook and the dangling ends of an angle worm behind the spinner appeals strongly to trout—more strongly in fact than it does to fly fishing "purists."

If you belong to the latter cult you will follow the old rule and fish the pool from above and then make a detour through the brush, unpleasant as it may be, and then fish it from below, casting your fraudulent feathers up, or diagonally up and across, and letting them come down to you, meanwhile taking care of the resulting slack with your left hand.

On the stretches of water that run smooth and unbroken try fishing your fly dry, even if you do not call yourself a dry fly fisherman. Fish up stream and float your fly over the good spots, then pick up and dry it with a few "false" casts as soon as it "drowns." When fishing in this manner try to float your fly under shelving or overhanging banks, where lone, lusty, lunkers lurk.

The summer trouter, besides using fine leaders, must mind his knitting and seize every advantage, such as casting over good places when the clouds momentarily hide the sun, dropping his fly where foliage shades the stream, and casting toward the sun and thus avoiding shadows as much as possible.

One more hint: Keep plenty of grass in your basket and whenever you stop to smoke or pass the time of day with some brother of the angle, get out your knife and open your fish, but do not wash them. Also, never leave your basket in the sun.

MILITIAMEN TO BOX AT ELGIN.

A boxing carnival with soldiers providing the bouts will be held at Moose hall in Elgin on the night of July 25. Boxers from Capt. Paul R. McCann's Eleventh Illinois infantry, N. G., will battle a team to be picked from Capt. M. H. Brightman's Company I, Fiftieth infantry, I. R. M. The latter is an Elgin company. Names of the contestants will be announced later. A special train will be run to the show over the Aurora and Elgin electric road, leaving the Wells street terminal at 6:30 p. m. and returning immediately after the bouts. Tickets can be had from members of the rival companies.

COPS TO PLAY JACKIES.

The Marquette police station baseball team, pennant winner of the police department, has accepted the challenge of the United States Naval Reserve school at the municipal pier. The teams will meet July 23 at 1:30 o'clock at Lake Shore playgrounds.

If Other Makers Use The "Hot Spot" Why Don't They Know What It Does?

It has been amusing to us to see the avidity with which rival makers and especially salesmen, have echoed the Chalmers statements about the "Hot Spot" and its virtues.

If you believe all you hear, they all have the "Hot Spot" now.

But when you analyze the various assertions, you find that while they use the term, it is doubtful if they really know what it means.

For example, one maker advertises that the "Hot Spot" makes his motor start easier when cold. Now that is ridiculous. The "Hot Spot" does not come into action until it is made hot by the exhaust from the running motor.

So you see it has no bearing whatsoever on the starting of the motor, easy or otherwise.

It is that other Chalmers feature, the "Rams Horn" manifold, that makes the Chalmers start easy at all times, in all climates and with all brands of gasoline,—good, bad and indifferent.

We have featured the combination of "Hot Spot" and "Rams Horn" Manifold as giving to this car qualities possessed in the same degree by no other namely;—gasoline economy, smooth running, more power and easy starting.

It's a pity there is no way of patenting adjectives or copyrighting coined phrases—it would protect copyists from falling into ridiculous errors!

The terms "Hot Spot" and "Rams Horn" are coined phrases originated in Chalmers publicity and, according to all the ethics of advertising, they belong exclusively to the Chalmers.

So far as we are concerned, we don't care how many copy the terms—imitation is the sincerest form of flattery.

Nor do we object to other engineers applying the principles indicated by those terms—if they know how.

One of the rewards of leadership is to be copied—imitated.

But it would seem as if the engineer who tries to achieve results by adopting these Chalmers discoveries, might instruct the sales organization as to what each feature does—for surely someone is in error as to that if we are to judge by the advertisements.

By the way; you have read and heard much about these two Chalmers discoveries—do you really know what a tremendous improvement they, together, make in a motor car?

If you don't, just ask a Chalmers salesman—he will be delighted to tell you, and then you'll understand why everybody in the trade says, "This is a Chalmers year."

CORN HAS BREAK OVER TWO CENTS; RALLY AT CLOSE

Less Demand for Cash Grain with Prices Off 5 to 15 Cents.

BY CHARLES D. MICHAELS.

Grain values responded more readily to selling operations early yesterday and reversed their action later. A good break was followed by a closing rally and last sales on corn were at losses off ⅛c to 1⅛c, July leading. Oats lost of ⅛@1⅛c, July leading. Oats lost ¼@⅝c in Chicago. In the southwest corn lost ⅛@1¼c, July in Kansas City leading, and oats there were ⅛c lower to ⅛c higher. Oats in Minneapolis closed ⅜@⅝c lower and Winnipeg ¼c higher.

Provisions were quiet, with pork and short ribs 5c, and lard 15c lower for the day.

Highest prices of the season were made for corn and oats the past week and closing trades were at gains of 5c to 7½c on corn and ⅝c to 1⅛c on oats. In pork the gain was 35c to 40c, lard 5c to 12½c, and short ribs, 20c for the week.

Reversal in Corn Sentiment.

Sentiment in corn underwent a decided change overnight, and while the president's vetoing of the proposed advance in the guaranteed wheat price to $2.40 was given as an excuse for selling, the dominating factor was the weakened technical position. Many of the local trading element were long overnight, and there was a general rush to unload at the start. Numerous stop orders were caught on the way down, and it was not until August was off 2⅛c from Friday's finish that the decline was checked. At the bottom July was 5⅛c and August was 4¼c from the high of the previous day.

Selling of September by Wagner and Harris-Winthrop was a conspicuous feature early, and later Ware & Leland sold August and Lowitz and Updike the September, but the latter bought around the close and helped the late rally. Many of the local professionals were active sellers, while some of those who took profits the previous days took advantage of the break to reinstate part of their lines. This buying, with that of Lamson, Bartlett-Frazier, Lewis, Shearson-Hammill, and St. Louis, was a big factor in making the rally from the low point. July finished at $1.60, August at $1.61⅛, and September at $1.60⅛.

The edge was off the cash demand and had a depressing effect. Sample values here were 5@15c lower, with receipts 140 cars. For the week arrivals were 2,396,000 bu and shipments 444,000 bu. Last year receipts were 1,491,000 bu and shipments 1,423,000 bu. Weekly forecast was construed as rather bullish, as temperatures below normal with but little precipitation was anticipated, but had no effect.

Dull Day in Oats.

Oats made only a minor response to the activity in corn and held within a range of ⅛@⅝ on the deferred futures. After numerous sharp fluctuations the close was about the top, with small losses, with August at 71½c and September at 70½c. Bartlett-Frazier were on both sides of July, while Anderson sold. The finish was at 75⅛c. Jackson Bros. were fair buyers of August and September on the early break, while Updike took September. Rains in the northwest were a bearish factor for a time.

Cash houses were moderate sellers of August and September against purchases to arrive, but country offerings on the whole were only fair. Bids for old No. 3 white to arrive, five day shipment, were 5½c over July early, but were later reduced to 5c over. No export bids were received from the seaboard. New No. 3 whites were ¼c over for shipment by Aug. 20 and for sixty days September price.

Demand in the sample market was rather slow and prices were off ½@1c, with receipts 137 cars. For the week receipts were 3,659,000 bu, the largest at this season in over five years, and compared with 1,620,000 bu last year. Shipments were 2,211,000 bu, against 1,664,000 bu last year. Exports, 114,000 bu.

Easier Tone in Barley.

Offerings of rye were very small, and no sales were reported here. Milwaukee and Minneapolis were unchanged. Receipts here one car and in the northwest five cars.

An easier undertone prevailed in barley, prices at the last showing a decline of 1@3c from the extreme top of Friday. Milling quoted at $1.10@1.25. Minneapolis was off 2c. Receipts here three cars and in the northwest fifteen cars.

Further rains in the northwest had a depressing effect on flax. Duluth closed 3@5c lower; July, $4.35; October, $4.42. Winnipeg, 1½c lower to ½c higher; July and October, $2.23. The three leading markets had twelve cars.

Timothy seed firm. September, $9.75 bid, and October, $9.25 bid. Country lots, $5.00@7.75 per 100 lbs. Toledo, unchanged to 5c higher; September, $4.85; October, $4.45; December, $4.40, and March, $4.65 per bu of 45 lbs. Clover seed, no market. Toledo, unchanged to 25c higher; cash, $16.50; October, $13.90 per bu of 60 lbs.

Government Buys Bacon.

Purchases of bacon by the federal government the last week aggregate 100,000,000 lbs, for delivery as wanted up to the end of this year. This was not generally known by the trade. There has been some quiet buying of short ribs of late by commission houses that may have been reflected in the army and navy order.

The best buying of the day was by Logan & Bryan. Cross, Roy & Saunders bought September lard. Selling was scattered and fair sized early and again late in the day. Prices declined despite the advance in hogs, as grains were lower, but the finish was on a small rally with light losses.

Shipments of meats for the week were larger than last year and of lard lighter. Hogs were at the best figures of the week. Prices follow:

	High.	Low.	Close July 13, 1918.	Close July 12, 1918.	Close July 14, 1917.

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

A FEW of the corn traders who sold out their holdings and went short on Friday's bulge took back their short sales on yesterday's break. Several took on a little long corn, but sold it out on the late bulge. It was noticeable that the bears were more aggressive early in the day, on reports of a break of 5 to 15c in the cash market, the greatest decline being on some of the better grades, which have been advanced of late by shippers covering short sales. One of the largest cash handlers said at the close that it looks as though the demands had been provided for the time being.

There are a great many bears on oats and the market is getting more hedging business as harvesting is progressing and country holders are more disposed to sell. Some of the largest cash handlers are not disposed to buy the new oats, but others are taking them, and two of the leading cash houses sold August fairly yesterday at 71½c. The fact that the oats show only ⅝@1c gain for the week, as compared with 5@7½c on corn, made the bears think that their position was right.

It is said that the government has paid a good price for the 100,000,000 lbs of bacon it bought the last week. Figures are not given out. Government business always requires extra handling, so that a price is made to cover all costs.

Some of the best posted cash interests advise against hedging sales being placed in the August, believing it safer for the country dealer to place the business in the September. They fear that the car situation will become such that oats may have to be held back in order to make way for wheat. Stocks of the latter are very small, while there is sufficient oats in sight to take care of the demand for some time. August is expected to go to a premium of 2@3c over the September.

A rather bullish construction was placed on the weekly weather forecast. The big corn states are promised a continuation of temperatures slightly below the normal, with little or no rain, when the need at the present time is moisture and hot weather. The northwest may receive a few showers.

Chicago has received 64,000 bu of wheat for the first two weeks this month. For the same time last year it had 670,000 bu, and for all of July 930,000 bu. The largest run of wheat in July was 21,100,000 bu in 1914. The five leading winter wheat markets, Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis, Toledo and Baltimore, received 6,440,000 bu in July last year, compared with 19,940,000 bu two years ago. In 1914, which was the big year, owing to the large crop and early harvest, receipts were 42,880,000 bu, Chicago getting about a half.

Illinois has a hay crop of 4,190,000 tons, as given by the government report. Last year it raised 3,438,000 tons and two years ago 4,785,000 tons.

"The south has been a better buyer of the cheaper cuts of meats, which have been offered at larger than usual discounts under short ribs," says W. L. Gregson, provision specialist. "The domestic demand for lard has been listless, but holders feel confident and its value seems to hold well, compared with other products. Hog feeders have shown confidence for some time and are liable to experience further encouragement by the eager buying that has been in evidence of late. The general trade sentiment is healthy, but there are no signs of scarcity."

Those who have been following the cash demand for corn of late believe that they see dangerous signs ahead. They call attention to the fact that wheat flour substitutes are now at a good premium over the wheat, corn flour being $12 per brl, against $10.40@11.25 for wheat. Barley flour is around $12.50, rye $12 and rice $19.25. It is understood that the attention of the food administration has been called to this condition. At the top white corn last week sold pound for pound at better than the government guaranteed price for wheat.

A rapid fluctuating corn market is looked for by those who have been calling the turns of late. There is now sufficient in the situation to cause a little hesitation on the part of buyers of the cash article, as prices have had a rather sensational advance of late. However, with the advent of the new wheat substitutes will be in active demand, and those who remain bullish say that the end is not yet in sight, although there may be numerous sharp reactions in both the cash and future around the present level.

"Milling grades of corn are selling at $2.00 and $2.15 in Chicago, while choice wheat is $2.30," says F. H. Babcock of Thomson-McKinnon. "This ratio is improper and must inevitably adjust itself. A maximum on flour prevents an important advance in wheat values, hence the adjustment must be at the expense of corn. New wheat is being distributed rapidly, thereby reducing the demand for substitutes."

The food administration has decided against the practice of millers and wholesalers of wheat flour, requiring bakers and retailers to buy substitutes from them with the wheat flour, otherwise refusing to sell wheat flour. Millers and wholesalers of wheat flour will be required to sell and deliver it, provided they have it on hand, to any person who presents a proper certificate, showing that he has on hand or has purchased the proper substitutes in accordance with rules of the food administration. Any violation of this ruling should be reported to the food administrator or the food administration at Washington.

Receipts of wheat at the three leading southwestern markets yesterday were 793 cars, against 360 cars a week ago and 95 cars last year. Kansas City had 500 cars and 500 cars are expected Monday. St. Louis had 219 cars yesterday and Omaha 74 cars. There were 426 cars of corn and 347 cars of oats at the six markets yesterday, compared with 337 cars corn and 346 cars of oats a year ago.

Chicago houses bought over 75,000 bu wheat yesterday to arrive. A car of new oats is expected here Monday.

P. O. Rollins has applied for membership on the Chicago Board of Trade.

New barley was offered for 30 day shipment at 95c for No. 1 feed with a test of 44 lbs.

St. Louis had a car of new oats yesterday which graded No. 4 mixed and sold at 73c.

Packing of hogs at Chicago for the season to date aggregate 2,699,000 against 2,263,000 last year.

CASH GRAIN NEWS

NO export bids for cash oats were reported from the seaboard Saturday. Domestic shipping sales were small at 15,000 bu corn and 30,000 bu oats.

Premiums on cash wheat dropped sharply as the result of the vetoing of the agricultural appropriation bill, which contained the proposed advance in the government minimum price to $2.40. Prices here were 2@3c lower, St. Louis 2c lower, and Kansas City 5@8c lower, dark hard in the latter market leading. A good demand, however, prevailed for choice wheat. At Omaha No. 1 and No. 2 hard sold at $2.20@2.23. Supplies are increasing.

Cash corn at Chicago declined 5@15c, the milling demand being less in evidence, while at St. Louis values were unchanged to 10c lower, the latter on choice white. Kansas City was unchanged to 2c lower, Peoria 2c higher to 2c lower, the former on white, and Milwaukee was 5@10c lower.

Demand for cash corn was slower and prices here were ½@1c lower. St. Louis declined 1½c, Kansas City and Milwaukee 1c, and Peoria 1@1¼c.

Bids for cash wheat sent out from Chicago Saturday night showed a decline of 1@2c, and follow:

INSURANCE NEWS IN ALL BRANCHES EAST AND WEST

Agents' Commissions on Terminal Grain Elevators.

BY THOMAS R. WEDDELL.

Commissions to local agents in connection with the coöperative plan for handling terminal grain lines will be protected to the extent of the commission allowed in the locality where the risk is located.

The Underwriters' Grain association will deal only with the agents placing the lines direct. The association must collect 90 per cent of every premium within forty-five days, without any deduction for postage, exchange, etc. This gives the agent placing the line a 10 per cent commission. The companies are to make settlements with their own agents for the difference between the 10 per cent and the regular rate applicable where the risk is located.

Outside the excepted cities, an office controlling an elevator line will receive 15 per cent on the amount carried in the companies in its own office and 10 per cent on the remainder. The agents of the other companies will receive 5 per cent. Each company will be allowed to designate the agent or agents to whom this commission is to be credited.

SEEK TO IMPOSE TAXES.

The ways and means committee of congress has asked the national board of fire underwriters for information as to the amount of insurance on American property written by foreign companies not licensed in this country, or at the home office of licensed companies, thus escaping American taxation. It is understood that congress contemplates a tax of 10 per cent on such premiums, so far as they can be reached. The national board replied that the companies writing such business make no report to any taxing authority in this country, and that the amount of the premiums can only be estimated, but it is believed to amount to $100,000,000 a year.

WESTERN FIRE PREMIUMS.

The annual tabulation of the premiums of fire insurance companies in Western Union territory has been prepared by the Argus comparative charts. The premiums in the field for 1917 were $140,041,878, an increase of $16,427,611. The loss ratio was 53.47 per cent, as compared with 53.82 per cent in 1916. The Union companies wrote premiums of $106,967,711, with a loss ratio of 53.44 per cent, while the other companies wrote $33,074,167, with a loss ratio of 52.01 per cent. The majority of these companies are members of the Western Insurance bureau, those in that organization writing $28,935,025, with a loss ratio of 51.05 per cent."

Crops Above Average; Prices Higher in June

Composite condition of all crops of the United States on July 1, as given by the government report, was about 1.6 per cent above their ten year average, compared with 2.9 per cent above the average on June 1. Final yields per acre of crops last year were 2 per cent above the average. This year's total acreage in cultivated crops was 3.7 per cent greater than last year.

Price level paid producers of the United States for the principal crops increased 0.4 per cent during June. In the last ten years the price level decreased about 0.5 per cent in the same time. July 1 showed the index figure of prices about 5.9 per cent lower than a year ago, 88.5 per cent higher than two years ago, and 76.2 per cent above the July 1 average of the last ten years.

Hogs, cattle, sheep, and chickens decreased 1.4 per cent in price to producers from May 15 to June 15. During the same period in the last eight years the decrease was 0.5 per cent. ARMOUR REVIEW

Armour & Co. in their weekly report of trade say: "Modification of restrictions on beef by the food administration was the greatest factor in beef trade during the week. A decided improvement is looked for in the early future. The general market is strong. The east is showing improvement.

"The provision trade has been strong, with a continued good domestic demand. Stocks are being consumed rapidly. Heavy buying of bacon by the United States government was a feature of the week. No new export business. All provisions are higher. The hog market is strong to higher. There has been a good call for lamb and veal."

ENGLISH FORCED TO SELL BULK OF YANKEE STOCKS

Steel Holdings of Canada and Several Neutrals Show Gain.

BY GLENN GRISWOLD.

The report of the United States Steel corporation of the placement of its securities indicates that the popular conception of the position of European investments in American stocks is far awry. It shows that the English have dug deep and surrendered for cash the bulk of their American securities, if Steel be a fair barometer, but they are alone in this respect.

English investors owned 788,512 shares of common and 180,188 of preferred on June 30, 1914, as compared to only 173,723 shares of common and 38,519 of preferred on June 30 last. In fact, the most part of present English holdings are in custody of the government, to be available in correcting exchange or establishing credit.

France has given up only 10,000 of the preferred owned in that country before the war, and the common holdings of French investors have been reduced by half.

Holland Sits Tight.

It was popularly supposed when foreign selling was being credited with long and unbroken declines in the market that Holland, always a prodigal investor in American securities, had sold "to an irreducible minimum." The fact is that Holland investors now own 229,485 shares of Steel common, as compared to 356,945 before the war, and 25,264 preferred, as compared to 28,740.

Canada, Switzerland, Belgium, and many of the prosperous neutrals show gains in their holdings of both common and preferred.

It is interesting that holdings credited to Germany and Austria show large gains in the last three months. This is due to the fact that shares which have been found to be owned by alien enemies have been credited to those countries. Germany had 876 shares of preferred and Austria 683 on March 31, 1918, as compared to 3,264 and 2,203, respectively, on June 30.

Investors Discover 3s.

Investors appear to have just discovered the conversion 3 per cent government issue. There have been bids in the market for them for a few days, and prices are moving upward. It was an interesting anomaly that while investors have been buying Liberty 3½s and searching the lists for bargains in municipals and farm loan bonds this government issue has been selling at a yield of better than 3.60 per cent, while being a discount bond that is entirely tax exempt.

The issue is a conversion of the old government 2s, which have been shorn of their circulation privilege. They are selling at 89½ to 90. Maturing in 1945 and 1946, the yield and discount are attracting investment.

CHICAGO CURB QUOTATIONS

LOCAL unlisted securities continue very quiet. Emerson-Brantingham preferred sold at 63 and closed at 62 bid, offered at 64. Avery preferred was unchanged at 93½ bid, offered at 94½, and the common at 96½ to 97½.

Great Lakes Dredge and Dock was neglected at 57 to 59. There were no reported sales in Kellogg Switchboard and Supply company, the market being quoted at 160 to 165. Small lots of Butler Bros. changed hands around 170. Linderman Steel common continued to advance, sales being made at 14¾, closing at 14¾ bid, offered at 14⅞. Inland Steel sold at 224.

Fisk Tire and Rubber was unchanged at 55 to 57. Goodyear Tire and Rubber common at 97 to 98, and the preferred at 165 to 168.

Gain of $82,800,000 in Loans Made; Deposits Are Larger.

TALK OF THE STREET

THE situation on the western front was favorably construed by the market. Although price changes were small, there was renewal of the view that the German offensive will not be effective.

One of the larger commission houses said: "The market is now in a position to weather unfavorable news, and should rally on any new incentive to buy. We believe stocks to be a purchase on slight concessions, and we favor United States Steel common and the copper shares.

It is declared that those who predict a rise in Marine preferred will have to wait a little longer. President Franklin says there is no change in the negotiations with the British syndicate.

At the moment there is a better feeling in investment bond circles. The leading New York houses have been doing an enlarged business during the last few weeks.

It is regarded as an interesting fact that the June report of unfilled tonnage of the United States Steel corporation was but 100,000 tons less than for the corresponding period last year. June shipments of the corporation were about the same as the current output of rolled steel. Buying by the government during the month was approximately 3,000,000 tons. The steel companies have now but little doubt that government requirements for munitions at home and abroad will take up the capacity of the steel mills during the second half of the year.

New York banking interests are credited with believing in better prices during the next few months. They are thought, however, not to consider the present an opportune time to advance prices.

Big Increase in Liberty Motors Due This Month

It is understood that the production of Liberty motors will get going on a tremendous scale some time this month. Before early August it is expected that close to 1,000 a week will be coming through, as compared with recent weekly schedules of about 25 per cent of that figure.

The engine itself is now in practically final form. Over 2,000 changes in the original design were necessary before Washington was satisfied its greatest potentialities had been achieved.

No expense has been spared to accelerate production, which is already considerably greater than the complete airplane manufacturing facilities care for, but it takes infinite time and detail to build up satisfactory organizations. For instance, it has been stated that the Ford company will have to devote 30,000 men to Liberty motors alone to reach 100 per day schedule.

The Packard company, whose design served as the basis for the Liberty motor, is still the top notch producer and will be until Ford is tuned up to its job.

UTILITIES SEE A SILVER LINING TO WAGE CLOUD

Officials Believe U. S. Will Be Forced to Raise Rates.

Officials of public utility corporations and owners of the securities of public service corporations have overcome first fears of the announced policy of the war labor board to order materially higher wages for employés regardless of the ability of companies to make payment. They conclue that the order would mean receivership for so many utility properties essential to the war program unless increased revenue is provided that federal authority will be exercised in providing an ample increase in rates.

Philip H. Gadsden, chairman of the national committee on public utility conditions, has indorsed the plea of the utilities that the president exercise his right to fix rates with a view to supply sufficient income to keep the utilities in efficient condition for war purposes.

Furnishes 60% of Factory Power.

He calls attention to the fact that the unification of all industry in the interest of the war has served to bring out in bold relief how essential the public utilities are in maintaining the energies of the nation in the struggle.

"Upwards of 60 per cent of industrial or factory power is furnished by public utilities," says Mr. Gadsden. "The present supply is now unequal to the demand because of the speeding up of all industries on account of the war.

"It is stated that practically all of the high speed steel (the so called electric steel) is now manufactured through the medium of electric furnaces which are largely operated with electricity furnished by public utilities.

New Industrial Centers Formed.

"By reason of war orders, new industrial centers are being formed to house the army of new workers, thus making tremendous demands on present electric railway systems. Upwards of 80 per cent of the factory employés are now transported daily by the electric street and interurban railroads, these railroads moving approximately 20,000,000,000 passengers annually.

"The public utilities must be relied upon to furnish at least 20 per cent of the toluol necessary for the prosecution of the war.

"They must furnish important short haul freight service to relieve the congested steam railroad conditions at terminals and industrial centers."

Sioux Falls Increases Fares.

The voters of Sioux Falls, S. D., ratified by a vote of 1,180 to 894 an increase from 5 to 6 cents in the local street railway fare. The proposition was brought about through demands of the employés for increased wages. A committee of business men took the matter up and appointed accountants to audit the books of the company. On completion of the audit the committee recommended to the city council that the company be allowed to raise the rate to 6 cents. Due to franchise provisions, it was necessary to bring the matter to a vote of the people, which was carried out with the above result.

All Byllesby electric properties reporting for the week ended July 6 show the following new business gains (net): 126 customers with 136 kilowatts of lighting and 562 horsepower in motors. New business contracted for but not yet connected includes 937 customers with 307 kilowatts of lighting and 876 horsepower in motors. Electric energy output was 20.5 per cent greater than during the corresponding period a year ago.

United Fuel Gas company's gasoline report for the week ended June 28 showed a production of 206,586 gallons, compared with 180,537 gallons during the corresponding week of last year. Total production from Jan. 1 to June 28, 1918, was 6,182,205 gallons, as against 5,713,654 gallons in the same period of last year. Average daily output since the first of the year was 34,537 gallons, compared with 30,974 gallons last year.

FINANCIAL NOTES

STOCK EXCHANGE has admitted to list U. S. of America 4¼ per cent gold bonds of 1932-97 of first Liberty loan converted and 4¼ per cent gold bonds of 1927-42 of second Liberty loan converted. Said bonds will be added to the list of securities to be cleared with transactions beginning yesterday.

Following the session of the executive committee of the Baldwin Locomotive works President A. B. Johnson stated there was nothing to announce. When asked whether any action was taken on the plan to construct a locomotive plant at East Chicago, Ind., he said the matter is not before the committee.

The McCrory Stores corporation reports sales for June of $774,276, compared with $626,600 for the like period of last year. This is an increase of 20.9 per cent. The sales for the first six months of the current year are reported at $4,062,027, against $3,357,413 for the same period last year. This is a gain of 20.89 per cent.

Anthracite shipments in June, 6,867,669 long tons, compared with 6,887,256 tons in May and 7,049,037 tons in June, 1917.

Sales of the Mason Tire and Rubber company for June were $302,123. This is an increase of more than 100 per cent over June, 1917.

The committee on securities of the New York stock exchange has announced that transactions in the committee shares of the Pacific Mail Steamship company on Monday, Aug. 5, shall be ex-rights unless the sales are made specifically for cash. The rights may now be dealt in. Transactions in rights must be settled by Aug. 22, after which date dealings shall be as in securities.

French merchants have arranged to meet the $50,000,000 of trade acceptances maturing yesterday.

TICKER LIMPS THROUGH YEAR'S DULLEST DAY

Sales Under 100,000; No Interest Shown in News.

[New York Times Financial Review.]

New York, July 13.—[Special.]—No serious hardship would have been worked had the stock exchange observed today as a holiday, for transactions were at low ebb for the year, with a total business under 100,000 shares, and price movements clearly reflected general indifference to any changes in the situation marked by the day's news.

There was discernable in the moderate fluctuations no effort to measure either the significance of the German chancellor's half hearted peace talk or the bearing on Germany's future military policies of the death of Von Hindenburg. As to the latter the street naturally were skeptical, for the German field marshal had been "killed" several times before by the overseas correspondents.

The allies are in no mood to listen to such peace overtures as the chancellor is so far disposed to make. He knows the requisites to the opening of negotiations, and has so far shown no disposition to make the essential concessions.

Most of the price changes today were fractional, with outstanding gains and losses limited to a few inactive issues which are quickly responsive to the slightest increase in activity. American Sumatra continued its decline until it is now twenty-two points under the best price for the year to date, and Booth Fisheries made a net gain of 2¾ on moderate buying. The differences between the high and low price of Steel was but ⅝ and the issue closed with a net gain of only ⅛.

CHICAGO STOCK TRANSACTIONS

ON the local stock exchange business was unusually dull, the only activity being in Union Carbide, which showed an advance of ½ point at 58. American Shipbuilding common was up 2 points at 130. Booth Fisheries common appeared to be well bought and the price advanced to 26½ compared with a previous close at 23¾.

—Reason For "Non-Notification"

"Non-Notification" Plan means No-notice of the assignment on invoices sent to debtors and permits a firm to collect accounts sold to us without the knowledge of their customers, thereby avoiding friction and loss of trade. With some customers we give such notice on the invoices and collect the accounts ourselves—"Notification" Plan.

What better reason for "Non-Notification" is there than the following EXTRACT FROM A LETTER TO ONE OF OUR "NOTIFICATION" CUSTOMERS:

"CERTAIN-TEED PRODUCTS CORPORATION
York, Pa., May 24, 1918
* * * *
New York City.
Gentlemen:—

We are also returning herewith invoices and bills of lading covering shipments upon which a stamp is placed stating that the title to the merchandise represented thereby has been sold and assigned to the Commercial Credit Co., Seventh Floor, Garrett Bldg., Baltimore, Md. In this connection, we wish to advise that we positively refuse to deal with any one in this transaction except * * * *, and until this matter is adjusted it is our intention to refuse all shipments now on hand and en route unless you can make arrangements whereby we can pay the amount of these invoices to you direct."

* * * * Our Customer's Name Omitted

We will deal with a firm on the "Notification" plan where we would not accept "Non-Notification," therefore, there is less risk of loss to creditors if accounts are sold on the "Non-Notification" plan than on the "Notification" plan.

WAR REFUGEES' INFLUX BRINGS U. S. A PROBLEM

But Larger One Is Labor Shortage Due to Lack of Immigration.

BY HENRY M. HYDE.

Wartime movements of people into and out of the United States are puzzling and somewhat startling.

Within recent months a flood of temporary war refugees has begun to pour into the country. Their number constantly and rapidly increases. They do not come to make their homes here. Their object is to escape war burdens or war responsibilities, to find easier living conditions until the coming of peace.

In the year ending with July 1 over 134,000 such refugees were admitted to the United States. Though the number is comparatively small, the movement shows its increasing importance by the fact that 42,000, or nearly a third of the total, came inside our borders in the month of May.

If it continues to increase in anything like that way the government at Washington will find a new and troublesome problem on its hands.

From Canada and Mexico.

Of these people who seek a temporary asylum in the United States nearly two-thirds came over either the Canadian or the Mexican border. About 30,000 people crossed from Canada alone in May.

The old time normal immigration of about 1,000,000 annually, which prevailed before the war, has dropped now to a tenth of that number. No more than 110,000 permanent comers were admitted for the year just ended. And nearly one-fifth of them were Mexicans.

Against that addition to the population must be to set down 102,000 alien emigrants of the same class, who went back to their old homes.

From immigration the United States gained perhaps 6,000 or 8,000 people. A much larger percentage of males left the United States than entered, so that even the small gain in numbers shown is all on the distaff side of the ledger.

Fighters Not Only Drain.

Taking no account of the 2,000,000 men already in the armies and the 500,000 more in the navy, and therefore out of industrial pursuits, there are actually tens of thousands fewer active and able bodied men in the United States than there were two years or even one year ago.

The number of Americans not in the military service who have gone out of the country on one errand or another is astonishingly large. During the year just over more than 250,000 citizens went abroad, and nine out of ten of them were men.

To look over the list of countries from which come the current immigrants—bearing in mind the nationalities of the big groups of immigrants in pre-war years—is to get some startling surprises. More immigrants, by several thousands, came to the United States last year from Mexico than from any other country. In normal years tens of thousands of Poles came to the United States. In 1917-18 the Polish immigration had dwindled to 660.

Blacks from Africa.

From Italy, which even in 1915 sent more than 60,000 immigrants to this country, came only 2,250. Perhaps the most astonishing of all is the fact that since the war began the immigration of black men from Africa has reached from 6,000 to 8,000 annually. Unless, indeed, one finds it still more remarkable that during the year in which the United States has been at war with Germany more than 2,000 enemy aliens of German birth have been admitted to the United States as immigrants.

One cannot imagine it possible that any such considerable number of citizens of the United States should be admitted to the territory of the German empire. Each year since war began the number of immigrants from Japan has been slowly increasing, until last year the figure was 10,500.

Woman in the Problem.

One gets from an analysis of the immigration tables a clear explanation of the increasing labor shortage in this country. Their study makes it clear why more and more it will be necessary for women to go into fields of work which have hitherto been confined to men.

The longer the war continues the more weight is given to the view of those who hold that there will be practically no immigration to the United States after the war is over. At least the immigration from the countries now at war is likely to be severely restricted, if not prevented, by their governments. The constantly diminishing man power in them all will make it a matter of national preservation.

Oil Dividends Misleading.

The lure of the big dividends paid by various new oil promotions is attracting the savings of wage workers. Many of these small investors have suffered losses during the last three or four years through listening to promises of enormous profits from investments in insurance, motor, and film promotions. These promises were not fulfilled and the victims, becoming a little wary of profits that are far in the future, are turning to something that they think will give quick results.

Of course, no statistics are available, but it is certain that hundreds of thousands of dollars are being paid every month by Chicago and Illinois wage workers in installments on oil stocks. It is also reasonably certain that three-fourths of this money will be lost.

The feature of these oil stocks that is so attractive to the small investor is the dividends. Shares paying anywhere from 6 to 36 per cent a year are offered at prices to make the yield 15 to 30 per cent.

Why should any one be satisfied to put his money in a sound bond yielding 6¼ per cent a year when he can get from two to five times as much? The reason is obvious. The big dividends make the investment hazardous, even if the undertaking has merit. Somebody gets a commission of 20 or 25 per cent for selling the stock, and when that is deducted capital which the company obtains will be costing it anywhere from 20 to 50 per cent a year—if it continues to pay dividends. Evidently such a rate for money means disaster unless extraordinarily good fortune in finding oil intervenes. Exceptionally good fortune comes to very few companies, and they cannot be picked out in advance.

Kansas City Railways.

E. H.—The Kansas City Railways company is issuing $7,750,000 of 7 per cent three year notes secured by deposit of $10,141,000 first mortgage bonds. The object of the financing is to retire $6,259,000 of notes which matured on July 1 and to pay for betterments and extensions. The new notes will evidently have first mortgage security. The company operates under a franchise which in effect makes the city a partner and guarantees the bonds. In order to provide income for an increase in wages, the company has been permitted to increase fares to 6 cents for one year from June 15 last. With the increased fare it is figured that interest on first mortgage bonds and bond secured notes will be earned about twice. The notes are well secured.

American Telephone and Telegraph.

H. I. W.—The new 6 per cent convertible bonds of the American Telephone and Telegraph company are unsecured, but the company has earned nearly five times its interest charges for some years past, and with the addition of the $3,000,000 interest on these notes fixed charges will be covered nearly four times. Evidently there is no reasonable doubt that interest will be earned with a wide margin. The safety of principal is assured by the value of the property, which is supposed to be much in excess of its book valuation. The book value is about three times the total amount of the bonds, including the new issue.

Missouri, Kansas and Texas.

L. N., Blue Island, Ill.—The interest on some bonds of the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas system has been paid because the receiver deemed it advisable to pay. We do not know his reasons in detail for paying certain coupons and not paying others. Holders of defaulted bonds generally deposit them with a committee as a method of joining hands to protect themselves. In many cases nondepositing hondholders reap the same advantages as the others, but not always.

Armour & Co. Debentures.

W. S. D., Sterling, Ill.—The new Armour debentures are junior to $50,000,000 of mortgage bonds. After them comes $100,000,000 of stock. In view of the facts that average earnings cover total interest charges several times over and that one-sixth of the debentures will mature every year, thus rapidly reducing the debt, they are entitled to a high rating.

Brief Answers.

C. W.—The Western Development company had issued $405,858 of stock up to April 30. It reports that it has seventy-three producing wells and paying dividends of 6 per cent a year. Amount of production not stated. Stock is a speculation, not an investment.

F. J. C.—The receiver of the American Real Estate company has issued no report recently. Realty market in New York has been depressed. Probably he has made no recent sales. Creditors' prospects depend largely on improvement in market.

B. B. M.—Interstate Iron and Steel was reviewed recently. Send stamped envelope for it if you wish it.

COTTON TRADE NEWS

NEW YORK, July 13.—Conflicting views of southwestern weather and crop conditions seemed responsible for further irregularity in the cotton market today. An opening decline was followed by rallies on the dry western belt forecast, but prices eased off again, the general list closing barely steady at a decline of 2 to 17 points.

The weather map showed showers at a couple of Texas points. A private crop report placed the condition at 81.6, compared with end-June figures of 84.7. Futures:

LAST HOPE OF TRACTION VOTE IS GLIMMERING

Ald. Richert Says Council Will Adjourn on July 2 Without Action.

Ald. John A. Richert, chairman of the city council committee on finance, yesterday dispelled the last remaining hope that the council would consider the proposed traction legislation before it adjourned for the summer.

The council meets Wednesday. The alderman said he would ask then that the council adjourn July 22, the following Monday. It will not reconvene until after the November election.

Walter L. Fisher, the city's special counsel in traction matters, said it would take at least two weeks for the attorneys to finish the work of preparation of the proposed ordinance for unification of the surface and elevated lines and a subway system.

Last Hope Is Frail.

By this time, it was pointed out, the council will have adjourned and the last hope that the matter would be submitted to the voters at the November election was gone.

Little satisfaction was obtained from a suggestion that the council might be gotten together later in the summer for a special meeting.

"There will be a meeting of the local transportation committee on Monday to hear from Mr. Fisher," said Ald. H. D. Capitain, chairman of the transportation body. "We are going ahead with the preparation of the ordinance.

"As one member of the committee I want to say that I am standing back of the recommendations and report made by the Chicago traction and subway commission. I don't believe that any of Mr. Fisher's suggestions will override those of the commission.

Commission Called Competent.

"The commission was composed of three of the most competent engineers in the United States. I don't think any one wants to disapprove of the fundamental principles outlined by these men.

"I can't say now what is to happen to the traction ordinance, except that the committee will finish its work."

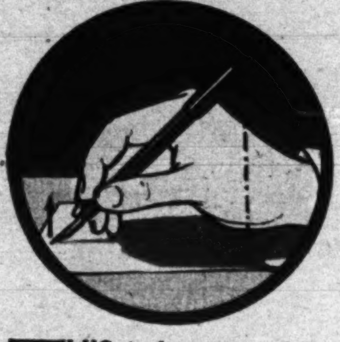
"THE THREE MUSKETEERS," BY LIEUT. HERBERT MORTON STOOPS—Lieut. Stoops, a former artist on The Tribune staff, now serving in France, sent this caption for the drawing: "To two of the three musketeers of the western front—the Englishman and the Frenchman (to whom the war is familiar)—the landscape is flat and the sky uninteresting save when dotted with aircraft; but to the third—the Yank—every battered landmark spells history, and the heavens above France sing of the romance of the sky."

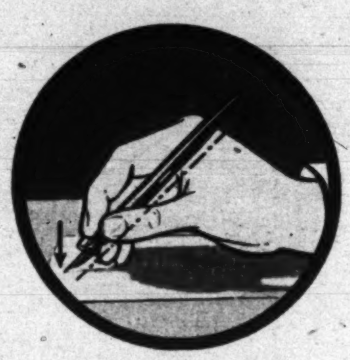
Now Comes Fountain Pen Betterments

The Perfectly Balanced Houston



THESE diagrams explain what perfect balance means in a fountain pen. To the left is the ordinary pen—the weight comes at the end of the holder—gravity draws the pen point from the paper. That's why you remove the cap of your pen when you use it—and why you cut off half the handle of the ordinary holder.

With the Houston the weight is thrown to the pen point (see diagram to the right). This materially assists in writing. It enables you to write all day long without tiring. It also insures a constant never failing flow of ink.



THIS is but one of the Houston exclusive features. One of its many betterments. But if it had but this one exclusive feature—perfect balance—it would be your pen choice in direct comparison.

"Snapfil" Filling Device

The "Snapfil" Filling Device is another patented feature. Another Houston betterment. It means you can fill your Houston in an instant from any ordinary ink well. Moreover, this filling device cleans your pen as it fills it. It is positive and never failing.

Never Failing Feed

The Houston Alligator Feed is the third betterment for your consideration. This insures a constant, never failing flow of ink to the pen point. In other words the Houston is "self-starting." You don't have to bump or thump it to start. It is a simple and practical feed. It is self regulating.

Non-Leakable

Here's a feature users of the common fountain pen will appreciate—the Houston is non-leaking and non-sweatable. The Alligator Feed provides that all surplus ink is drawn back into the reservoir.

Non-Loseable

The Houston "Snapfil" is practically non-loseable. A safety chain is attached to the cap and pins to your coat. This also is assurance against dropping the pen from the pocket. It also makes sure you replace the pen in its customary pocket and in an upright position.

HOUSTON

SNAPFIL

FOUNTAIN PEN

Other Betterments

You would naturally expect a pen with such betterments to cost more than ordinary pens. The Houston "Snapfil" averages about the same in prices. But counting pen betterment, pen convenience, pen satisfaction and pen safety, it costs considerable less.

See Your Houston "Snapfil" Pen

Houston Fountain Pens must be made too slowly and too carefully to permit large quantity production. Consequently their sale is controlled by exclusive dealers.

Any Houston dealer can supply you with a Houston to suit your hand and writing. And will loan you one after another Houston until your most exacting requirements are satisfied.

It will pay you to find a Houston dealer—if you cannot easily find one write us. We will see that you are supplied. A postal-card request will bring the Houston illustrated catalog and price list.

This little French Woman opens her heart

CAN'T you imagine her — this dainty little person — whose first duty always is to be beautiful? And now especially must she be her loveliest, that she may better inspire and bring courage to her fellow-countrymen. In this land of soul and sunshine, ideals are never forgotten. Beauty is necessary to each day's living.

There is eagerness in every word she writes:

"Chantilly, France.

My Dear Monsieur:

It is a great calamity that has befallen me. No longer can I secure the wonderful face cream that gives beauty to my skin. Your Creme Elcaya has been my best friend for more than eight years. No other is like it. Is it possible for you to send me three or four pots direct? It would give me the greatest happiness.

Yours, P—— L——"

Wouldn't you feel happy to know that you were responsible for something that was every day helping to increase the number of beautiful women? When I get such letters as this, I am more glad than I can tell you that we have been able to produce Creme Elcaya—a cream that can do so much toward revealing the utmost of personal loveliness. This ideal, non-greasy, disappearing toilet cream, used every time before you put on your face powder, will bring out the beauty Nature meant you to have. There is nothing difficult about it; just follow this formula.

A little Creme Elcaya rubbed gently into the skin; then if you need color, a very little good Rouge spread carefully over the cheeks before the Cream is quite dry; and after that the film of face powder over all.

Watch the improvement in your skin from day to day. Before many moons you will wonder why you ever envied that friend her charming complexion.

A package, including Creme Elcaya and Elcaya Complexion Powder, may be had for 10 cents if sent to the address below, addressed to Department K. Use Elcaya Rouge or your own, as you please.

So embarrassing—so expensive—and so unnecessary!

Stains—Odor—that won't come out

The cleaner's bill is bad enough. But to think that the perspiration stains and odor never come out! If she had only used Odorono!

"It's wicked to spoil dresses that way"

"And especially in war times! Why, my dear, if you only would use Odorono, you would never spoil your party gowns with perspiration—no matter how warm it was or how much you danced!"

Dr. Allyn endorses Odorono

"We do not believe that any harm can come from stopping the excretion of perspiration in limited areas such as under the arms, feet, forehead, etc. Experimental and practical tests show that Odorono is harmless, economical and effective when employed as directed, and will injure neither the skin nor the health."

Lewis B. Allyn, Westfield Laboratories, Westfield, Mass.

YOUR blouse back from the cleaner's with a perspiration odor still in it! An expensive frock absolutely ruined by one wearing! Ugly stains on your coat lining! And all these annoyances are so unnecessary!

Your dresses, blouses, coats can be kept as dainty, as unspoiled by any mark or odor of perspiration, as the day you bought them—and you need wear no protection for them, either!

The excessive perspiration that spoils your clothes and causes you embarrassment is not healthful. Odorono, a toilet water formulated by a physician, used twice or three times a week, keeps the underarms, feet, hands, or forehead always dry and sweet—you perspire unnoticeably all over.

Use Odorono tonight; do not have another day of embarrassment, another dress or coat ruined. You will feel so fresh and dainty! And it is so easy to use!

At all toilet counters in the United States and Canada, 50c and $1.00. Trial size, 30c. By mail postpaid if your dealer hasn't it.

Address The Odorono Co., 1186 Blair Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Write for our booklet, "The Appealing Charm of Daintiness"—to know more about perspiration and how to relieve it. Suggest to the men in your family that they write for "The Assurance of Perfect Grooming."

Sweaters just like new

THEY washed their sweaters themselves—right at home! With wonderful Lux suds! And they came out soft—fluffy—not a bit shrunken—just like the day they were bought!

Lux is simply wonderful for woolens of any kind—sweaters, blankets, babies' clothes, scarfs, everything. Lux leaves your woolens like new because with Lux there is no rubbing! Nor one injurious element!

Lux comes in pure, delicate flakes. They melt the instant they touch hot water. You whisk them into the foamiest lather. You work the woolens about in these wonderful suds. You don't rub. Then you rinse them thoroughly in three waters the same temperature as the first, with a little Lux dissolved in the last water to leave the woolens softer and fluffier.

Could anything be easier?

Get your package of Lux today from your grocer, druggist or department store. Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

To wash colored sweaters

If you have not washed your sweater before, test an end of it in cold water to which vinegar has been added. Half a cupful of vinegar to a gallon of cold water may be used to set most colors of woolens and silks. Then rinse thoroughly before laundering. After washing, add vinegar to the last rinsing to hold the color.

Whisk Lux into a rich lather in very hot water—two tablespoonfuls to the gallon. Add cold water to make the suds lukewarm. Then put your sweater in, and swish it about in the suds. Wash quickly, pressing the suds through the sweater, but do not rub. Rinse three times in lukewarm water, and dissolve a little Lux in the last rinsing water to leave your sweater soft and woolly. Never wring sweaters. Just squeeze the water out, and spread on a towel to dry in the shade.

Wash white sweaters as above but in hot suds

Use Lux on anything that pure water alone will not harm.

The Scientific Way to End Corns

THE Blue-jay plaster is a scientific invention. It is made by the makers of B&B surgical dressings, used by physicians and hospitals everywhere.

So you may be sure that this is the right way to treat a corn.

The corn is ended by a bit of wax, which is centered on the corn. It cannot spread.

While the wax is acting, a pad protects the corn. So all pain ceases when the plaster is applied.

A band wraps the toe snugly and fastens itself. With this comfortable dressing one forgets the corn, and the plaster can't become displaced.

The pain stops instantly. Then the bit of wax gently undermines the corn. In two days it lifts out. Only rare corns need a second application.

Let Blue-jay prove itself tonight. You will never again merely pare a corn, or treat it in the old, crude ways.

½ cup cold water.
1½ cups boiling water.
4 teaspoons salt.
2 pounds substitute.

Part II.—When cooked cornstarch is cool add three teaspoons of salt, the yeast dissolved in a little lukewarm water, then the four and a half pounds of white flour and the two pounds of substitute, which may be corn flour, corn meal, barley flour, rice flour, rolled oats, or Graham flour or bran. Knead well and let stand to rise for about three and a half hours, according to the temperature of the room. When done punch down and let stand 45 minutes; punch down again and let stand 15 minutes and put in greased pans. Let rise and bake 30 to 40 minutes. This bread will keep fresh from four to five days in a tin bread can.

WM. F. NEUSON, Head Baker, Cook County Hospital,
Harrison and Wood Sts., Chicago.

CONSERVATION BREAD.

4 cups wheat flour.
2½ cups boiling water.
1 level teaspoon salt.
1 dessert spoon shortening.
1 yeast cake.
2 cups corn flour.
2 medium sized potatoes.
2 teaspoons sugar.
1-3 teaspoon baking soda.

Dissolve the yeast in one-fourth cup of the water when cooled to tepid. Sift the wheat flour into mixing bowl and set in a warm place. Into another vessel sift the corn flour. Boil the potatoes in the rest of the water, boiling when the potatoes are put into it. When the potatoes are done pour water off on the corn flour, stirring same till smooth. Then mash the potatoes and add to the hot corn flour. Beat until light and smooth and allow to cool to tepid. Now pour all into the center of the bowl of flour, and dissolve the soda and add to the whole. Then add all the other ingredients and knead up stiff, kneading at least half an hour. Let it rise until twice the original size, knead down for half an hour, then let it rise as before. Finally, put in pans, let rise till light, and bake for an hour. (A bread white and truly palatable.)

HELENA W. ROBINSON, 1345 N. Hoyne Ave., Chicago.

LIBERTY COFFEE CAKE (NO WHEAT).

2 cups brown sugar.
1 cup corn flour.
2 tablespoons butter substitute.
1 cup sour milk or cream.
1 cup rice flour.
1 teaspoon baking powder.
1 well beaten egg.
1 teaspoon soda.

Work the sugar, rice flour, corn flour, and fat together as in making pie crust. When well mixed set aside one cupful and to the remainder add the beaten egg, the sour milk or cream, the soda dissolved in boiling water, and enough rice or corn flour or both mixed to make a batter like loaf cake. If milk is very thick one-half cup of flour is sufficient. Put in a large shallow pan which has been buttered and floured and sprinkle the cupful of first mixture over the top. For special occasions a few chopped nut meats may also be added to the top. Bake in a moderate oven. Nice to serve with tea or coffee. (A whole cup of the first mixture for the top is rather generous.)

MRS. J. C. HOOD, 510 De Koven Ave., Racine, Wis.

GRANDMA'S BROWN BREAD.

2 cups sweet milk.
3 cups corn meal.
1 wheat flour.
1 good teaspoon soda.
1 cup sour milk.
1 cup barley flour.
1 cup molasses.
1 teaspoon salt.

Bake about one hour in moderate oven. (Note this is a large recipe.)

MRS. DELIA A. SMITH, Shabbona, Ill., R. F. 2, Box 32.

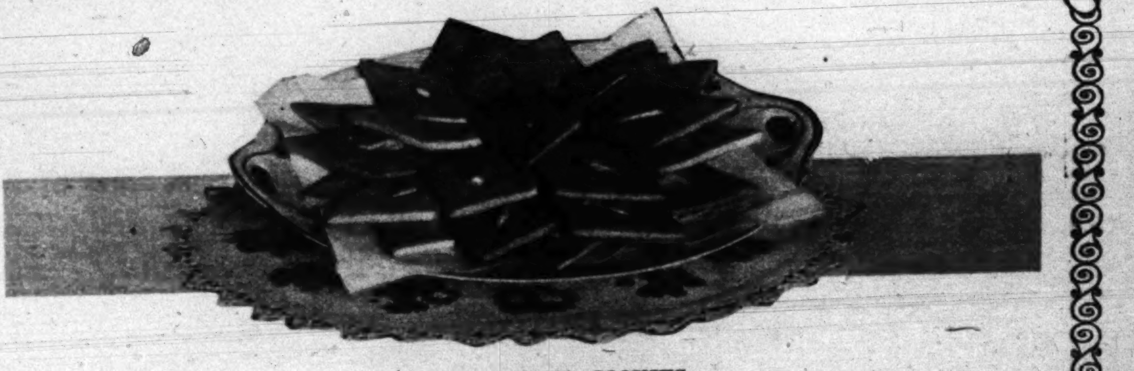
BAKED BROWN BREAD.

1 pint sour milk.
1 cup corn meal.
½ cup molasses.
1 teaspoon soda.
1 cup of raisins.
1 egg.
1 cup rye or barley flour.
1 cup Graham flour.
½ cup sugar.
½ teaspoon salt.
1 tablespoon shortening.

Drop into three or four one pound baking powder cans that have been well greased and dusted with flour, filling cans half full. Cover tightly and bake in moderate oven about one hour. (Five thousand or more recipes for steamed brown bread were submitted, but we hope this is a "different" baked bread.)

MRS. JANE MARTIN, 10 Geneva St., West Chicago, Ill.

Another page of recipes will be published next Sunday.

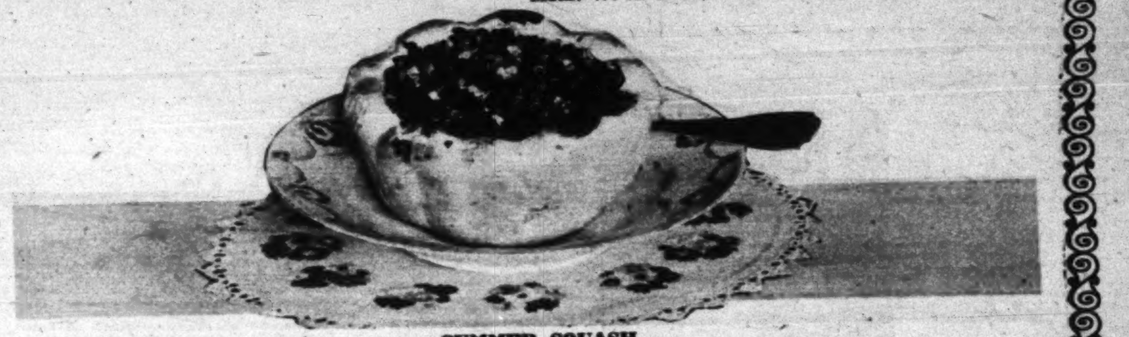


CHINESE ALMOND COOKIES.

¼ cup butter substitute.
¼ cup sugar.
1 egg.
½ teaspoon almond extract.
1 cup rice flour.
¼ cup almonds.

Blanch almonds, halve and cut in strips; dry in warm oven. Cream butter and sugar, add whole egg, almond extract, and flour gradually. Roll out very thin in plenty of rice flour, cut in small rounds or squares, and place on cookie tin with spatula. Place nut strips on top of wafers and gently press in. Bake till straw colored. These are easily made and delicious to serve with tea or fresh berries. (There are few recipes in which one-fourth cup of sugar will go so far. These are sweeter than most of those innumerable unique rice flour confections made by both the Chinese and Japanese.)

MRS. W. A. ROE, 5559 University Ave., Chicago.

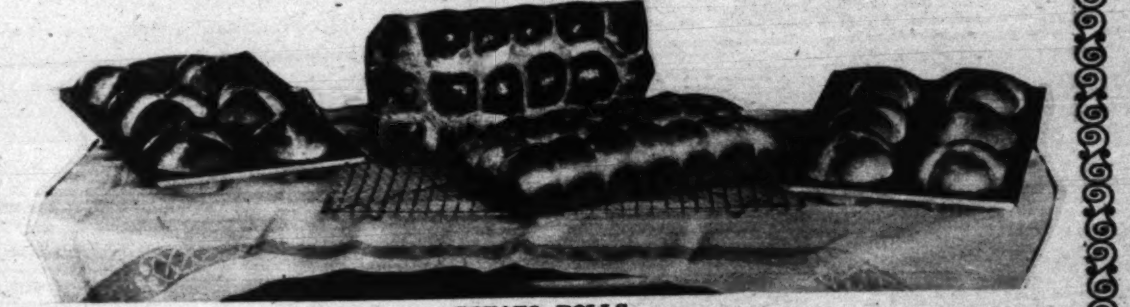


SUMMER SQUASH.

1 summer squash.
1 onion.
Salt.
1 carrot.
A little green pepper.

Cut out the contents of squash, chop fine with a carrot, onion and a little green pepper and salt. Fry this in oil, then fill the shells with the mixture and bake until brown. (With a harder shelled squash and when no picture is needed the shell may be scooped cleaner. This recipe furnished a good starting point for interesting variations.)

MRS. OSWALD BECKER, 115 McClellan Blvd., Davenport, Ia.



POTATO ROLLS.

1 yeast cake.
2 tablespoons sugar.
¼ cup melted shortening.
2 cups mashed potato.
Wheat flour.
2 cups scalded milk.
1 teaspoon salt.
2 eggs.
1 cup corn flour.

Beat scalded milk gradually into the potato. When lukewarm, add dissolved yeast, corn flour, and one cup wheat flour. When very light add beaten eggs, sugar, salt, shortening, and wheat flour until it can be handled. Knead until smooth and elastic, then let rise to double its bulk. Knead again and shape in any way desired. Let rise in pans and bake. (The picture shows most of the recipe. Some of the dough baked in small muffin tins had a fine crust. The pictured rolls rose too much in oven. With more corn flour they behave better. One-fourth of the recipe makes a good batch of excellent rolls with less than two cups wheat flour.)

ANNE C. RANKIN, 309 Grand Ave., Wausau, Wis.

WHEATLESS POTATO PATTIES.

2 cups mashed potato.
1 cup rice flour.
½ teaspoon salt, scant.
2 eggs.
1 cup milk.
¼ teaspoon baking powder.

Beat until light and fry to a golden brown in fat. Enough for six people. (These are unusually palatable.)

MRS. M. LEPOSKY, 1028 Ferdinand Ave., Forest Park, Ill.

RICE FLOUR PATTIES.

¼ cup sugar.
½ cup rice flour.
¼ cup butter or substitute.
1 teaspoon vanilla.

Mix and roll very thin and bake in moderate oven about twenty minutes. (These are sweeter than most cookies and extend sugar well.)

MRS. E. L. ROLPH, 334 Irving St., Toledo, O.

The TEENIE WEENIES HAVE A TROUBLESOME DAY.

By WM. DONAHEY.

IN spite of the bad roads the Teenie Weenies had to travel the little folks sang many songs as they moved along. They were on their way to spend several weeks camping in the big woods and every Teenie Weenie was as happy as he could be. The first night they camped only a short distance from the shoe house, for the roads had been bad and they could make but little headway.

The next morning things seemed to go wrong as soon as the little folks were out of bed. First, a pinching bug ran away with a loaf of bread and when the Cook threw a stick at it he upset a thimble of coffee and put out the camp fire. Next, one of the mice, which pulled one of the tiny wagons, was taken sick and the Doctor had to give him a dose of castor oil, so it was quite late before the little people were on their way again.

They had been moving along the road only a short time when the wagon which the Clown drove ran over a peach seed and broke one of the wheels.

"This is hard luck," said the General as he viewed the wrecked wheel. "There's nothing to be done but leave several of you fellows to mend it while the rest of us go on ahead and get a camping place ready for the night."

The Doctor and the Chinaman were ordered to remain with the Clown and repair the wheel, while the rest of the Teenie Weenies moved on to the next camp. As it was then near lunch time the Cook left enough food for the three Teenie Weenies and the kind hearted Lady of Fashion agreed to remain and prepare it for them. At noon time the three Teenie Weenies sat down to their lunch, which the Lady of Fashion had set out daintily on a big clean leaf.

It took most of the afternoon to fix the wheel, but it was not a hard job, as the wagon was shaded from the hot sun by a big dock leaf. When the work was done the Lady of Fashion took her place beside and driver and once more they moved along, followed by the Chinaman and the Doctor.

They had gone only a short distance when the horses began to appear nervous. They were just coming around the side of a hill at the time and suddenly the horses leaped into the air and plunged down the hill at great speed.

"Steady there, boys, steady now!" yelled the Clown and he pulled on the lines with all his strength, but the horses paid no attention to his words and plunged on straight for a hole near the roots of a big tree.

"Crawl out through the wagon and jump!" shouted the Clown to the little lady at his side. The Lady of Fashion scrambled over the corn, beans, and other things in the wagon and leaped to the ground just as the team dashed into the hole.

"What's the trouble? What happened?" asked the Lady of Fashion as the Doctor ran up and helped her from the ground.

"There's the trouble," cried the Doctor, pointing up the hill towards a big black cat which stood staring with big round eyes at the Teenie Weenies.

"I beg your pardon," said the cat, "I didn't mean to cause all this trouble. I just happened along, that's all," and he quickly disappeared over the hill.

The horses were so badly scared it took quite a long time before they could be coaxed out of the hole. Fortunately the Clown, the horses, and the wagon were not damaged by the hurried trip into the hole and after the things, which had fallen out, were gathered up the little folks set out for camp, where they arrived just at dark.

A FRENCH WAR POSTER

BY POULBOT

By ELEANOR JEWETT

WHEN the gray skies weep, and the long days drag, and the sun seems gone never to shine again with its old warmth, then down the street march the poilus of France, bandaged and limping, but smiling, while "to attention" spring the children on whose tender shoulders rests now the future of France.

It is the favorite game of the French children, this game of war. And they are becoming adepts in the art which once was practiced to perfection by the boche alone. Red Cross man, and standard bearer, and two brave soldiers of the line, we find in this remarkable piece of poster work by Poulbot. The bearded poilu smiles to himself as the swift little hands spring to position, and limps forward with his companion with never a turn of the head, or a movement to betray to the little army the warmth of the feeling that surges in his heart at sight of them.

Quite remarkably has the artist caught the expressions on the children's faces. The sober little girl biting her lip to repress the chuckle that might come, because of the joyous honor that is hers—to carry the flag; the wide eyed young sharpshooter fingering his musket bravely, and confident that the water bottle on his back is full, in case, O wonder of wonders! the soldiers might chance to be thirsty and ask him for a drink; the red capped private next, with his long sword, to manipulate which some skill is needed, you may be sure; and last the tiny Red Cross man with the symbol stuck in his gun. Gallant little soldiers! In your hands the honor of France is safe indeed!

Poulbot, the artist, is a famous French cartoonist. More recently he has become celebrated as a sympathetic interpreter of children—particularly the children of the war. His book, "Des Gosses," is a book to laugh over till the tears come and the merry merges into the tenderly pathetic, rarely the sad, for Poulbot has kept the courage of youth, and the eyes of youth to which no cloud of tragedy or disappointment is so dense that the sun of a happy tomorrow may not shine through.

WAINWRIGHT and the LITTLE GODS

by Margaret Cameron

One Man Helped a Lady in Distress and Another Could Not Believe His Eyes.

IT was shortly after noon, and Wainwright, going downtown to luncheon, was about to take a train at the Astor place station of the subway when he saw a lady coming toward him, gayly smiling and holding out her hand. Her manner was a charming compound of delicacy, vivacity, and the poise which is the result only of social experience; and he wondered, even then, that he had met her and forgotten the circumstance. However, he was sure that he should remember in a moment who she was.

"How do you do?" she cried as he took her hand. "Who knew that you were in New York?"

"I arrived only last week," he replied, "and I'm staying out of town for the present. Are you taking this train?"

"No; I had just left it when I caught sight of you, and—— O! perhaps it was important that you should take it!"

The gates had closed noisily.

"No, I'm in no haste."

"Really! Then—have you time to walk home with me? It isn't far—Washington square, you know—and we can chat as we go—about London," she added, with a fleeting upward glance.

"By all means." Still finding no clew to her identity, Wainwright's perplexity increased as they climbed to the street and turned briskly west.

"But first," she lightly continued, "I think I'd better explain why you are so suddenly forced into a modern travesty of a medieval situation."

"O—am I?" he asked rather blankly.

"You are. You have succored single handed a maiden in distress, and you are now bearing her away in safety to her father's castle."

"Banners waving, plumes floating from my helmet, and Shanks' mare gayly caracoling beneath me," he suggested.

"Precisely. I'm glad you have a sense of environment. You see—it's a little difficult to explain, but——"

"Then why bother?"

"I prefer to." A tinge of hauteur darkened her tone and as quickly disappeared. "But it's the sort of thing that only happens, in our day and generation, between paper covers—yellow ones at that, I'm afraid. Did you notice as we left the subway a middle aged man with burning dark eyes, who stared—unpleasantly?"

"Come to think of it, I did encounter a malevolent glance——"

"But you didn't realize that you had just unhorsed him and left him prostrate on the field? You do those things so easily!" she mocked, laughing.

"Who is he?"

"He's an anachronism. He's an old and trusted retainer of my father's—his bookkeeper, to be exact—who is suffering from a mild type of dementia resulting from overwork and disordered nerves."

"He is a bit out of place in helmet and cuirass."

"Isn't he? But that's the form his vagary takes. He will be a knight, and he—he——"

"Sues for your favor," quietly supplied Wainwright. "I think I understand."

"Now, if you remember anything at all about my father"—her glance was full of humor—"you know that he has a truly medieval inability to understand nervous phenomena of that character, and an equally medieval practice of inflicting summary chastisement, so far as he can, on those who offend him." He nodded, vainly trying to recall such a person among his acquaintances. "Consequently it has seemed desirable that he should not be told of this man's eccentricity."

"You should have him taken in charge. Some day he'll——"

"No, he won't. He can't. We're going away for several months. I suppose that's why he was so desperate today. And it isn't as if he were vicious or really insane. It's just a sort of obsession that will wear away as he grows stronger. But I was frightened when I got off that train, for I knew he was following me, and I didn't want to call a policeman. And then I saw you, and I knew at once that—I mean, I recognized you at once; or almost at once. I was a little in doubt because I didn't know you were on this side until I saw your English clothes. There! I've bored you with this long story because I wanted you to understand why you were suddenly metamorphosed into a hero of melodrama." A little wave of her hand dismissed an unpleasant subject. "Now tell me all about London. You've been over a long time, haven't you?"

"Four years," said he. "How late is your information?"

"My last news came in a letter from Isabel Danby"—he wondered why she looked so mischievous—"but, of course, it was all about the most wonderful baby in the world."

"Ah!" Here at last was a glimmer of light.

"Then perhaps you know what they're going to name him? They hadn't decided when I sailed."

"Why, do you know——" Her eyes rounded in astonishment, but she caught her quick words midway, demurely concluding: "I mean, don't you know? They call him Richard, after —— My land!" They were crossing University place, and her tone suggested calamity.

"What's the matter?"

Before she had time to reply they were joined by an elderly man whose inflexibility of appearance and manner left little doubt in Wainwright's mind that they had met the father whom she had earlier described.

"Ah, Frances," said the newcomer, "I have been at the house to see you. Aren't you rather late in returning?" His glance just touched her companion.

"I was detained, and on my way back I met——" For an instant Wainwright held her glance, and he fancied that she seemed disconcerted, but she concluded, apparently with perfect composure, "Father, you remember Mr.—Harris?" Then slowly she flushed crimson.

"Harris? I do not remember having met you, sir."

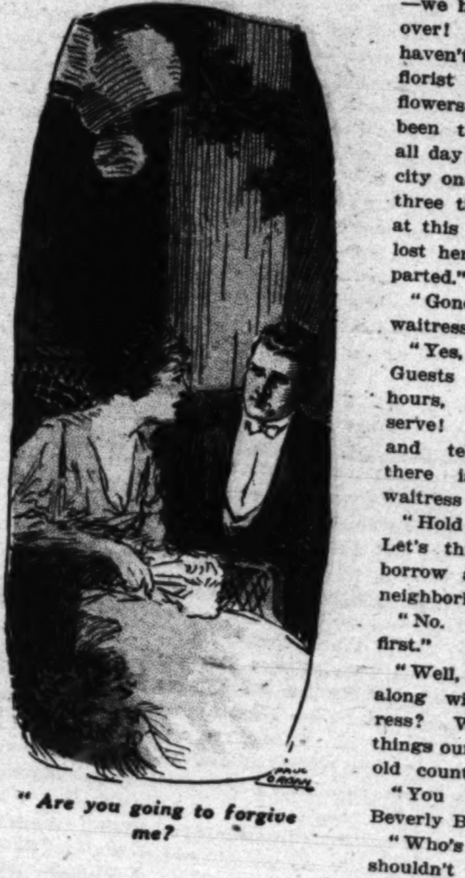
Wainwright was about to correct the error when she lightly responded:

"O, don't you? Well, it's possible that you've never met after all. London is rather devious. At any rate, he's a friend of the Danbys. What brings you uptown at this hour?"

While her father explained that he was to meet some business acquaintances at luncheon in the neighborhood, Wainwright rapidly decided that his wisest course lay in immediate departure. She had evidently mistaken him for some one else, but to correct her error and proclaim his own identity in that crisis, he reflected, would profit him little and would embarrass her. Her father would unquestionably fail to understand a mistake of that nature, and she would find it difficult to make the full explanation he would demand without disclosing the situation she had been at such pains to conceal.

"O, must you go?" As she gave him her hand he felt a comforting assurance that the warmth of her tone was meant for the present rather than for the previous Harris, whoever he might be. "I'm sorry that we're going away so soon, for we shall probably not see you again. However, our next meeting may be as unexpected as this one was this morning. Who knows?"

"At any rate I hope it may be soon."



"Are you going to forgive me?"

Inwardly resolved that it should be soon if human ingenuity and Isabel Danby could bring it about, Wainwright went his way, and in the course of time betook himself, rather earlier than usual, to the suburb where resided his friends Mr. and Mrs. Robert Howard, whose guest he was.

As he entered the door he heard Mrs. Howard's distressed voice at the telephone in the upper hall.

"But I tell you I must have some one! I have a dinner on. . . . I say I am giving a dinner tonight. . . . No, not a large dinner, but a very important one. What? . . . Can't you send me any one? . . . O, dear!" She ended with an unmistakable sob.

Wainwright mounted the steps three at a time, to find his hostess in a disconsolate, weeping heap at the top.

"What's the matter, Lady Bob?"

"Matter? Everything's the matter! The fish is too large, and the birds are too small! The mayonnaise curdled—we had to make it all over! And the rolls haven't come yet! The florist sent the wrong flowers; the water has been turned off nearly all day; I've been to the city once and downtown three times; and now—at this hour!—Ilma has lost her temper and departed."

"Gone! Not your waitress!"

"Yes, my waitress! Guests coming in two hours, and nobody to serve! I've telephoned and telephoned, and there isn't a trained waitress to be had."

"Hold hard, there! Let's think. You can't borrow a maid in the neighborhood?"

"No. I tried that first."

"Well, why not get along without a waitress? We can pass things ourselves, in good old country fashion."

"You don't know Beverly Brown!"

"Who's he, that he shouldn't pass the butter?"

"He's—Beverly Brown, and he'd rather break all ten of the commandments into small smithereens than bend one of his pet conventions. He never makes any allowance for other people's emergencies and is incapable of understanding that any one can differ with him on a social question and still be within the pale. His hobby is genealogy and his fetish is family. And he never passed the butter in his life!"

"Hm! His horizon must be—limited!"

"It is; though he's clever in a way. He's taken a fancy to Rob, and I haven't shocked him out of it—yet. You know, he's interested in the new company—in fact, he's a very important director—and Rob wants to convert him to his policy before he goes away. He's going to Cuba, or South America, or somewhere, next week. So we planned this dinner—and it's Rob's last chance. Mr. Brown is most easily approached by way of his palate—and you know yourself we have a good cook."

"I do that!"

"The funny thing about her is that she belongs here in this little town. But everything has gone wrong all day, and now that wretched Ilma! He'll be irritated and argumentative, and he'll disagree with every single thing Rob says and convince himself irrevocably that Rob's policy is all wrong, and then he'll oppose it forevermore! You see? It looks trivial, but it isn't. It's the wreck of a man's hopes!"

"No, it isn't! Not yet! There must be a way out of this, and we'll find it or perish in the—— I'll tell you, Lady Bob! Easy! I'll buttle for you!"

"You!"

"Sure thing! I'm a bully butler!"

"Clifford Wainwright! You never in your life——"

"Yes, I have, too! I buttled once in a play. I'm sure I could pull it off all right."

"Of course you could 'pull it off'! It isn't that! But it's so absurd! Besides, I need you to talk to the daughter."

"What daughter?"

"Miss Brown."

"Thanks," dryly. "If she's a chip of the old block, I'd rather buttle."

"She isn't. She's the one thing in Beverly Brown's life that he hasn't been able to order." "I don't know a more attractive girl than Frances Brown."

"Frances!" He bent a sharp glance upon her. "Is her name Frances?"

"Yes. Why not?"

"True," carelessly, "why not? It's a common enough name. And it might as well be Hecuba as far as I am concerned. It's me to the butler's pantry. This seems to be my day for adventures."

"But you'll break up my party! My table won't balance!"

"Who else is coming?"

"Miss Sewell. Just six of us."

"Should I remember Miss Sewell?"

"No, you've not met her."

"Good! Isn't there some unattached male pusson whom you can hale in on short notice to take my seat?"

"Yes, there's Edgar Trumbull—but he can't talk."

"Can he buttle?"

"Mercy, no!"

"Well, as Mr. James says, 'There you are.'

"O," she miserably conceded, "I must have somebody to serve dinner!"

"Kismet! I buttle."

"Of course you know that Rob will be furious." "He'll be sure to forget and call you Cliff. By the way, I suppose you'd rather not be spoken to as Wainwright?"

"No. Call me——" He hesitated for a moment, ruminating, and then, whimsically smiling, he said, "Call me—Harris."

As his wife had prophesied, Howard rebelled vigorously against the plan when he reached home, but to no purpose. It was too late to change the arrangement, and he had barely time to scramble into evening clothes before the guests arrived.

When Mrs. Howard, giving the last touches to the table, called, "There they come, Clif!" Wainwright lazily pulled himself up from the easy chair in which he had been lounging and glanced toward the gate.

"The devil!" said he, then, tensely.

"What? What did you say, Clif?"

"Nothing!" he replied curtly, and went into the hall, bitterly convinced that the reckless little gods were playing at dice with his destiny as in his self-imposed character of butler, self-dubbed Harris, he gravely opened the door for Mr. and Miss Brown, who passed him without a glance.

Nor did they notice him when he announced dinner and stood stiffly beside the door as the little party entered the dining room; but the moment came, during a lull in the conversation, when Frances Brown lifted her careless glance to his face. He saw the first amazement give way to incredulity and consternation in her eyes before he discreetly turned away his own. When he looked at her again she was talking animatedly to the laconic Trumbull, her head held high, and a slow, deep flush had crept upward to her hair.

Presently the lightly drifting chat touched London and Americans living there, and Mr. Brown turned to his daughter, asking:

"By the way, Frances, who is the Mr. Harris with whom I met you this morning?"

"O, he's just a man who—knows the Danbys," she indifferently replied. "There's no reason why you should remember him. I don't know why I did."

"I thought him fine looking."

"O, did you? I used to think him clever"—her emphasis of the past participle was as unmistakable as it was delicate—"but physically he belongs to a type rather too frequently met to be distinguished."

At that moment, for the first time, her father got his eye on the butler and put up his glasses to assure himself that his sight had not tricked him.

"Y-yes," he dryly acquiesced, looking searchingly at his inattentive daughter, "the type is, as you say, somewhat—common."

The dinner proceeded smoothly, enlivened by quips and soft laughter. The misadventures, so far as Mrs. Howard was concerned, had exhausted themselves with the departure of the recreant maid, and the spirits of the hostess brightened as course succeeded perfect course, Mr. Brown's affability waxing with each.

Coffee was served on the veranda, in the furtherance of a deep scheme to engage Trumbull in chat with the women, leaving the host free to devote himself to Mr. Brown. Presently, when the two had finished both their cigars and their business chat, Howard, successful and elate, turned to the others, suggesting:

"Wouldn't you like to go down to the end of the garden to see a little kiosk sort of thing that we've been building? The lanterns aren't in yet, so it may be a bit dark, but it's our latest toy, and we like to play with it."

Accordingly, they all sauntered off down the scented paths, the young moon faintly lighting their way. This was the cue for "Harris," waiting in the hall, to follow with a tray of cool beverages.

A few moments later, therefore, when a dark figure paused at the entrance to the little summer house, the Howards remained serenely quiescent, until Wainwright's deep voice dropped like a bomb into their complacency.

"Good evening," said he. "May I come in?"

At the sound Frances Brown turned sharply toward him, peering vainly through the dusk in an effort to see his face; Mrs. Howard caught her breath; and her husband sprang to his feet, exclaiming:

"What the—— Who is that?"

"It's I, Bob. Did I startle you?" The voice was reassuring in its steadiness.

"O, hello, Clif!" faltered Howard, scrambling for his lost composure. "I thought it was Harris. I—I was looking for him."

"He'll be along in a minute, I fancy. He said you were down here, so I came on ahead. I hope I'm not——"

"No, no! Come in! Delighted to see you!" protested his bewildered friend, and introductions followed.

Mr. Brown turned from shaking hands with the newcomer to ask:

"Mr. Howard, did I understand you to speak of your man just now as Harris?"

"Maris," quietly inserted Wainwright.

"Yes, yes, Maris," repeated Robert blindly. "His name is Maris. Have a cigaret?"

"Ah!" said Mr. Brown deliberately. "His name is Maris. And—pardon my inquisitiveness, but I have a reason for asking—have you had him long?"

"N-no, not very long. He came to us quite recently—from England."

"From England! Ah! You—were satisfied with his references?"

"Perfectly. Why?" Howard desperately decided to try aggression.

"He resembles—strikingly resembles a man representing himself to be a gentleman and calling himself Harris who—whom I have recently met."

"Perhaps he is a gentleman in disguise," calmly suggested Wainwright. "Bob, you may be sheltering an angel unawares."

"A gentleman never needs a disguise," significantly replied the older man.

"Isn't that a little sweeping?" inquired Miss Sewell.

"It is improbable that he would seek employment as a household servant in any emergency," said Beverly Brown, "and quite impossible that, occupying such a position, he would permit himself to accompany, publicly, a lady whom he had formerly known."

"O—probably!" she conceded. "But can't you imagine circumstances—for fun—to prove he could to win a wager? Why, there are a dozen reasons why a man might temporarily assume a disguise."

"My imagination does not soar so far," was the dry response. "To my mind there can be no possible excuse, much less a reason, for a man's making a mountebank of himself. I speak, of course, of a man of our world—a man of breeding, of position, with traditions to sustain—in short, a gentleman. When he becomes a mountebank he ceases, in the finer sense, to be a gentleman. Do you agree with me, Mr.—Wainwright?"

"Oh!" exclaimed Howard, fancying he caught the drift. "Well, that's not my man. He's all right. I know all about him. In fact," with a flash of inspiration, "he has lived in the family of friends of mine for years."

"Really! Doubtless you are right, then, but the likeness is striking—I might almost say startling."

"After all, isn't it strange that there are not more physical duplicates in the world," said Wainwright casually, "considering that we are all built on the same general plan?"

"I dare say. But, then, there's the similarity of the name. It's a little queer."

"As to that," again Wainwright caught the ball, "would any of us accept without doubt, if we saw them in print about somebody else, any of the queer—not to say fantastically incredible—things that have happened to all of us? We talk of chance and coincidence, but I have a notion that most of these things are workings of the destiny that shapes our ends."

"Apropos of destiny," said Howard, "who's going to get swatted next in this rage of reform that possesses us?"

"Isn't it disheartening?" sighed Miss Sewell. "Everything we were brought up to believe has been disproved, and now everybody we pinned our expiring faith to is being exposed. What are we coming to?"

"An ancestor of mine," Wainright replied, "once said that the public morality is like the tide—ever ebbing and flowing; but the public conscience is like the mighty and undefilable, purifying even itself."

Mr. Brown turned sharply toward him. "Judge Peyton Wainright said that."

"Exactly. He was my great-grandfather."

"Really! A notable man in his day. An ancestor to be proud of, sir."

"I think so," was the quiet reply.

"I know several of the Wainwright family," Mr. Brown continued. "It's odd that I never met you before."

"Not particularly. I've lived abroad for several years."

"You must be of the Rhode Island branch."

"I am. Endicott Wainwright was my father."

"Really!" said Mr. Brown thoughtfully.

A man came down the path carrying a tray full of tinkling glasses. There was nothing in his size or general outline to suggest that he was other than the butler who served earlier in the evening, and it was too dark to see his face. Wainwright arose and strolled over to where his hostess sat breathless.

"What on earth!" she whispered. "Who is he?"

"Give it up! I believe he's the cook's cousin's son-in-law—that woman of yours is a jewel, Lady Bob!—and the clothes belong to Jerry Stranahan, if you know who he is. I don't, but he's a friend and a brother," he chuckled.

"How did you manage it?"

"By counsel with the cook lady, and by telephoning, and by—well, it was a bit expensive, perhaps—but it's worth it!"

"You poor boy! But," doubtfully, "of course it's all right out here in the dark, but when we go back to the house——"

"That'll be all right, too. Just you trust me, Lady Bob. There's more in this than meets the eye, but you sha'n't suffer." He turned away and dropped into a chair beside Frances Brown. "Are you going to forgive me?" he asked.

"Why should I?" coldly.

"At first I thought I had met you somewhere and forgotten it—though I might have known I never should have done that!—and at the last, when I understood, it seemed better, all things considered, to leave well enough alone until I could get Isabel Danby to set me straight with you."

"It is to be regretted that later counsels prevailed."

"But how was I to know that you were you, and were coming here tonight? And—I'm sure Mrs. Howard wouldn't mind your knowing that there was a domestic cataclysm at the last moment——"

"Evidently you were born to heroic deeds, as the sparks fly upward," she murmured ironically. "What a pity that valor is separable from its better part!"

"Discretion is not alone in a chance external resemblance to other—unrelated qualities," he daringly retorted. "Is it possible that what seems to you—what, for example, does it seem to you?"

"Assurance," said she promptly.

"That what seems to you assurance," he imperturbably continued, "is really discretion, unrecognized and misinterpreted?"

"Humph!" She turned an impatient, scornful shoulder to him, and a short silence ensued between them.

"At least you are convinced that you were not imposed upon by a cheeky servant."

"You discredit my intelligence."

"And it seemed desirable all around that your father should abandon his theory that your English friend and Howard's butler were one and the same—and that one a crook."

"And now you underestimate my father's tenacity."

At that moment, as the serving man was about to retire, they heard Mr. Brown say:

"By the way, Mr. Howard, will you ask your man whether my cab has come?"

"No, sorr," replied a strident tenor voice. "Anyway, not whin I lift the house it hadn't."

"Good lord!" muttered Wainwright.

"Let me know when it comes."

"Yis, sorr."

"That's an odd accent to come out of England," quietly observed Mr. Brown.

"You see?" breathed the girl.

"O, did you understand me to say that he was an Englishman?" recklessly temporized Howard, inwardly execrating Wainwright as the moving cause of the whole absurd, humiliating situation. "I said that Maris came to us directly from England, but surely that brogue speaks for itself!"

"Did he say—Harris?" gasped Frances. "Surely you didn't——"

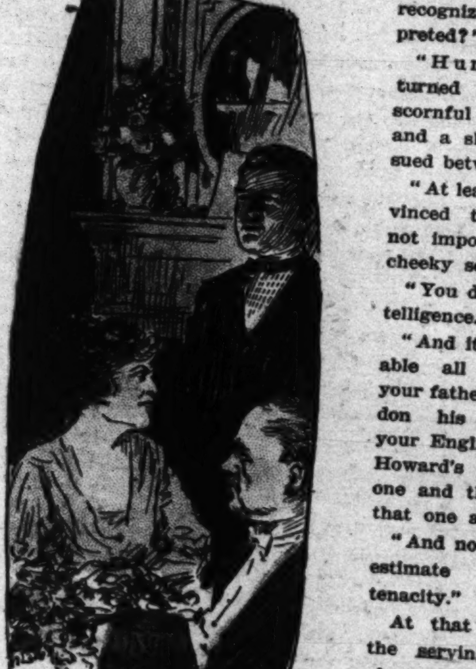
"Yes, but I did," he confessed. "We changed it to Maris, though, for your father's benefit. By the way, I suppose it's none of my business, but—who is Harris?"

For a moment she hesitated. Then, with a short laugh, she said: "Well, you don't deserve it, but—it isn't quite fair to make you bear it all. So, since you've asked—'I don't believe there's no sich a person.'"

"Sairy Gamp!" he ejaculated.

"O, please understand! I was in such straits! And I was sure you were—what you are—and it seemed so much simpler—then—just to take it for granted that—O, don't you see?" At the moment she failed to understand his silence, and hurried on. "Then, when father appeared so suddenly, I ought to have said that I'd forgotten your name for the instant, but—I was startled, and—I'd just been rereading 'Chuzzlewit'—— Are you laughing?"

"O, please! please!" It was his turn to gasp. "How can I help it! To think that you——"



"—— lifted her careless glance to his face——"

"You might try to understand——"

"And that is the one explanation that never dimly occurred to me!"

"Av ye plaze, sorr, the caab's coom."

"Which means that I must say good night," said Wainwright, arising, laughter still in his voice.

"You—you won't go up to the house with us, Clif?" uncertainly suggested Mrs. Howard.

"No, thanks. You know it's nearer for me to go across lots. I'm staying in the neighborhood," he explained to the others, "and have learned the short cuts."

"I'm sorry not to have seen more of you, Mr. Wainwright," said Mr. Brown. "And I regret that my daughter and I are leaving town so soon."

"Thank you," replied the younger man. "I shall soon be leaving myself, however. At least, I hope to sail on Thursday for Cuba."

"Cuba!" exclaimed several voices.

"Yes. That is, I haven't quite decided yet. It depends to a certain extent on—the advices I receive later."

"This is very odd," said Mr. Brown, "for my daughter and I expect to sail on Thursday for Havana on our way to Mexico."

"Is it possible! Cuba's an interesting country, Miss Brown."

"Is it?" she said. "I have a fancy that it may bore me."

"I hope not. I am anticipating—all sorts of delightful things, if I am fortunate enough to go at all."

"Really! I doubt," pregnantly, "if you would find the climate pleasant at this season. Is there any danger that we may miss that train?"

Good nights were hastily said, and Wainwright left them. As she reached the first turn in the winding way Frances looked furtively back and saw him coolly sauntering toward a path that only he and the Howards knew led behind the shrubbery straight to the kitchen door.

When the hurrying party arrived at the house, the man who had served them at dinner stood, erect and expressionless, beside the door he held open. Mercifully he was not called upon to speak, for he needed all his breath just then.

Passing him on the way out to the carriage, however, Mr. Brown paused.

"I think I'll put on my overcoat after all," said he. "These early summer evenings are cool." Then, as Wainwright helped him into the garment: "Do you think it's likely to rain, Maris?"

All but Miss Sewell and Trumbull, both entirely out of the running, saw the trap, and there was a general suspension of breath.

"No, sorr," replied Wainwright in a high, strident voice, which, however, it may have differed from that of the cook's cousin's son-in-law, was so unlike his own deep tones that Howard choked with sudden laughter. "No, sorr. It's a foine noight, sorr."

"Thank you," said Mr. Brown, and passed on.

Wainwright and Howard went to the carriage with them, and Frances was no sooner seated than she exclaimed:

"O, bother! I've dropped my handkerchief out this other side!"

Howard would have sprung to restore it to her, but the butler was before him.

"Good-by—Harris," she whispered. "And—if you should see Mr. Wainwright you may tell him——"

"Yes, yes! Go on!"

"Tell him that I think—maybe—he may find Cuba pleasant after all."

"T'ank ye, Miss Brown. Good night, sorr," said the butler.

After a period of thought, as they drove to the station, Mr. Brown said: "Frances, I think there must be something wrong with my eyes. I'm going to see Blake about them tomorrow. Did you notice a striking likeness between your Mr. Harris and that butler and young Wainwright?"

"There's a general resemblance, certainly," she thoughtfully admitted; "but then, as we said at dinner, the type is not an uncommon one."

"They all looked precisely alike to me," he confessed.

"Did they?" said his daughter. "How odd!"

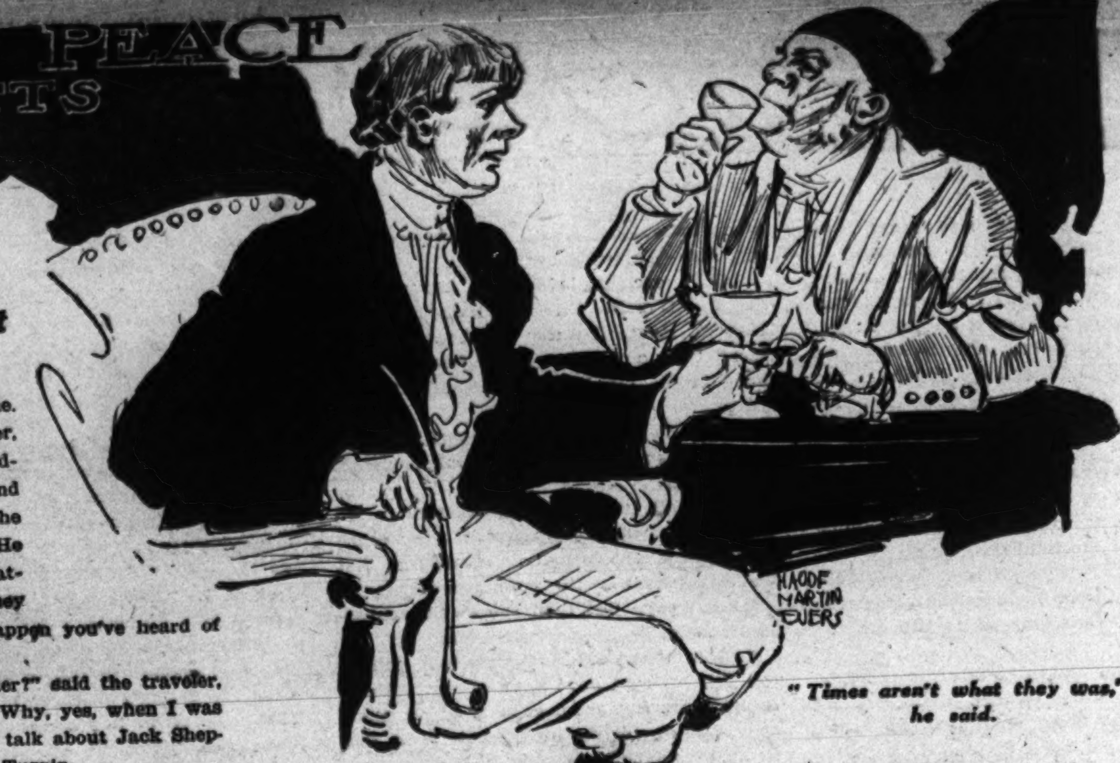
THE DOVE OF PEACE
by MARY S. WATTS



"Times aren't what they was," he said.

"Gold, Di'monds, Fine Long Chains for the Ladies, and Rings and Brooches," Says the Boy. But There Was More in It Than That, as Jerry Found.

THE landlord was a short, stout, meditative man upwards of 50 years of age, with a blue, clean shaven chin and a glistening baldness carefully protected by a black, silk skull cap. This head gear gave a slightly monkish cast to his expression further distinguished by a sort of innocent shrewdness—honesty not unacquainted with guile.

"I've seen the world," was his favorite saying, delivered as from the oracular tripod; his favorite theses the humors of the road and the various face of man. Lifelong attention to the comfort of his fellows had elevated him to the pulpitizing attitude: "Lord help us all—but I know what's best for you!" and the guest could not select a meal or indicate a choice in wines without his benevolent direction.

With all this, his inn was a quiet place, scanty of guests, upon a remote and little traveled road; and he himself had probably never ventured farther abroad than twenty miles from his own door. The world, in his philosophic view, came to him by reason of his trade; something he learned from it, undoubtedly, and the world itself passed on greatly enlightened.

"Times ain't what they was," he said—and if he had been the first man on earth to utter that sententious piece of wisdom, it could not have sounded more weightily truthful. He mopped up a circle of liquor from the table where his glass had stood, mopped the foot of the glass itself, and took a slow sip. "No. They've changed—mostly for the worse, to my way o' thinking."

"How changed?" asked the traveler. "People have been saying things like that ever since I was so high. 'Times are changed—we're all going to the dogs—oh, for the good old days!' 'Spite of all that, here we are in the year of grace eighteen-fifteen, and we haven't caught up with the dogs yet. England's doing well enough for me—God save the king!"

"Why, of course," said the landlord mildly. "The king hasn't got any better subject than me; but any man with his eyes open can see times are changed. Now Nathan Small says—"

"Nathan Small?" interrupted the other. "He was the fat man with the cast in one eye that sat next me, wasn't he? I should think he'd have trouble seeing anything. He kicked me once hard on the shin, under the table; I've been wondering why ever since."

"Kicked you, did he?" said the landlord, considering him attentively. "Well, Nathan hasn't got much tact. But I didn't think he'd kick anybody for nothing. 'Tain't safe."

"It was about something I said, I think. I believe it was when I said highway robbery was no longer a capital offense [there's a change in times for your landlord!]; then he kicked me for a hint to shut up, I suppose. But I'm not sure what he meant, exactly."

The landlord slowly removed the skull cap, slowly scratched his head, and slowly replaced the cap, scanning his guest the while.

"I shouldn't wonder if he meant me," he said at last. "Speaking o' highwaymen!"

The traveler gazed at him apprehensively. "I never carry much money with me, nor any valuables, when I'm going anywhere," said he, clearing his throat, and glancing toward his saddlebags lying at an inconvenient distance on a chair. "And my watch is an old one, a very indifferent time piece. Ahem—you were saying——"

"About Nathan Small," continued the landlord, "I say, sir, he'd no call to kick you, nor anybody else. I can do my own kicking, if I've got something to be offended about." He made a large gesture. "Lord love you," he said generously, "I don't mind. Most people know about me. And my grandfather, after he quit his wildness, was a worthy and respected citizen to the day of his death. He was Jerry Dart—Cheat-the-Devil Jerry, they used to call him. Happen you've heard of him?"

"O, your grandfather?" said the traveler, not without relief. "Why, yes, when I was a boy. They used to talk about Jack Sheppard, too. And Dick Turpin.

"Turpin was a little before my grandfather's time, but I believe he knew men that had known him," said the landlord, with pride. "Gentlemen of the road, they called 'em, and my grandfather was as fine a one as ever stepped. He had a little black mare, Lillibullero, he named her out of a song they had; by his say-so, she was the prettiest and the cleverest piece of horseflesh that a man ever threw a leg over. That's one of her shoes now, nailed up over the door for good luck. Nailed it there with his own hands, my grandfather did, and no one's ever budged it since."

"That's been a long while," said the stranger, turning to survey the bit of rusted iron.

"Seventy years," said the landlord, and tasted his liquor thoughtfully. "My grandfather died when I was a little chap of 10 or thereabouts, but I remember him well, a slim neat made man, remarkable straight and quick moving for his age, with bright black eyes. He kept this inn, the 'Dove o' Peace,' upwards o' thirty years." His guest glanced around the comfortable little bar, wondering inwardly how the late Mr. Dart had managed to combine the occupations of inn keeping and highway robbery, and yet left to the world a reputable house, a grandson who was a sober, upright man [as might be plainly seen], and, strangest of all, a respected memory.

"Your grandfather died of a lingering illness?" he inquired artlessly.

The landlord met his eye with gravity.

"He died sudden, sir," he said with emphasis. "Of a stroke. He only lived a few hours after it, but they got him undressed and the end came peaceably in bed. He quit highwaying before he turned 30, in what you might call the height of a successful career that began at the age o' 19 with his stopping the Dover mail, and making the coachman, guard, and four passengers turn out their pockets for him."

"A brilliant feat, that!" said the traveler gravely.

"He happened to be up somewhere in the northern counties time of the rebellion o' '45. Likely you've heard tell of that? Scotland was regularly boiling over like—like a pot o' flip! The Young Pretender came marching down with his rabble of bare legged Highlanders, marauding and proclaiming and playing hob right and left.

"A peaceable disposed man such as Jerry Dart, with a distaste for publicity, couldn't find a single quiet corner to sit down in comfort. Made no difference who you were, or what you looked like, you were liable to be haled up any minute in any company, and made to answer were you for King George or King James? Jerry would cheerfully have sworn he was for both and King Beelzebub into the bargain, if he could have been sure the questioning would end there. But it didn't; they were possessed to pry into all your affairs; they never let go, till they'd been through you, top, middle, bottom, and scrape the sides. And Jerry, for all he was so dare devil and ready witted, couldn't risk that.

"So he made up his mind to leave the country; and traveling by night, and sleeping in out o' the way places, such as hay stacks [for he was a very unassuming fellow, and simple in his ways] by day, at last he reached the hamlet of Braeborough, in the West Riding.

"It was a poor little shabby place, with a church and graveyard at one end, a tavern and smithy at the other, and nothing much between; you may see a score such in half a day's journey. But on the outskirts he passed a great, old brick house standing by itself in the midst of a forlorn, run to waste garden; there was a broken down wall about the grounds, with a gateway and drive; but it must have been long since any guest turned in there, for weeds sprung in the road and grew unchecked to the very door sill. The house had row on row of tall windows, and it was curious to see how not one of them was whole; those on the lower floors were patched carefully with papers, with rags, with pieces of blanket, with everything on earth that will stop a hole, even old pot lids; and some of 'em were closed up completely with boards nailed top and bottom."

The landlord paused and refilled his pipe. He told his story with deliberation and not a little relish, picking the words and rounding a sentence with the fluency of long practice.

"At the inn there was nobody but the inn keeper and his wife and a half witted lad they kept to look after people's horses, when there were any, which wasn't often, 'count of Braeborough being off the main traveled roads and in a solitary country. However, company was no object of Jerry Dart, just then; and fewer, the better. He dined in state off whatever poor victuals they had, the inn keeper and the wife and the half witted boy fairly running their legs off to serve him, and all agog to hear the latest news.

"Talk breeds talk, and question question. So, after a little, Jerry, whose mind was still running on the lonely house, says, naturally enough:

"'That's a queer old rattle trap of a place I passed on the edge o' town. Whoever the owner is, he's got a kind of fondness for fresh air, or else he ain't very keen about paying glazier's bills. Is he one of your county gentry?'

"No sooner were the words out of his mouth than he saw he had hit upon a mystery, sure enough. For everybody at once began to look secret and important, and, at last, the inn keeper, clearing his throat, with a solemn look:

"'Sir,' says he, 'that house is, as parson says, the figure and likeness of Tadmor in the wilderness, where the dragon shall rattle the scales of his belly over the steps of the altar!'

"'Whoosh!' says Jerry. 'You don't say! Dragons! Well, I should dearly love to see a dragon!'

"'There ain't any there,' says the wife. 'You're misleading of the gentleman, Tim. The house, sir, did belong to a county family, name o' Darcy, but they're all dead long ago, and I don't rightly know whose it is now.'

"'Nobody'd have it for a gift,' says the landlord, shaking his head.

"'Why not?'

"'Ghosts! Devils! Sh-h-sh!' says the half wit, putting in his oar. And with that, he got up and went tiptoeing about the room, whispering and rolling his eye in a way which my grandfather said was most amazingly unpleasant to see.

"'Gold, di'monds, fine long chains for ladies, and rings and brooches,' says the boy. And let me tell you that made Jerry Dart prick his ears.

"'Gold and di'monds!' says he. 'Pho! Nonsense! Boy's lying.'

"'No such thing,' says the innkeeper's wife. 'Silly he may be, but Jock tells the truth. You may be sure if he says there's gold and jewels there, he saw 'em.'

"'Well, all this is very strange,' says Jerry. 'You tell me no one lives there, yet, as sure as I'm alive myself, I saw an old woman out gardening this afternoon. I'll take my oath she was no ghost, and she didn't look to have much acquaintance with gold and di'monds, either.'

"'Ah, that's as may be,' said the landlord with a knowing air. 'We didn't say nobody lived there, sir; we said nobody owned the house. And no more they don't. The last o' the Darcys died eight and twenty years ago; twin brothers they was, and a wild, drinking, cursing, bloody minded pair of rake-hells like all the rest o' their tribe.

"'The story goes that one night they quarreled in their cups; they each one took a knife; they locked the door, put out the lights and fought it out in the dark, and next morning was both found dead and the room a shambles. After that the house was shut up and stood empty for years, no one turning up to claim it, and by and by it got the name o' being haunted. People says the dead men, murderers both, come back and creep and crawl about the rooms, knife in hand, holding their breath, and listening, and stabbing into the dark.

"'Then, after about ten years, along came the woman you saw this afternoon, and inquiring around, and finding the house was to be had for the mere trouble of going up and opening the door, she settled herself there, and there she's stayed ever since, living like a wild beast in a hole. Summertime she scratches up the ground, and grows vegetables; winter you see her out once in a while, picking up firewood. Rest o' the year she hardly puts her head out o' doors, and few people have ever got close enough to know what she looks like. Nobody knows how she lives, nor her name even.'

"'She's a warlock, it's my belief,' says the wife. 'Everybody's afraid of her. She might lay a spell on you to wither your arm or strike you dumb.'

"'Gold watches and di'monds and chains,' says the idiot again.

"'It's a wonder she don't have the place all defended with man-traps and pitfalls, and what-not,' said my grandfather, 'as long as the whole countryside believes her to have such a treasure.'

"The landlord laughed. 'No need o' that,' says he. 'Oxen and wainropes couldn't drag anybody there after nightfall. And who'd want to be caught upon such an errand as you hint in the daytime?'

"Well, sir, after all that, you won't be surprised to hear that just as the clocks were going 12 that night, my grandfather was riding up the old, overgrown drive to the Darcy house, with a pistol in his hand, and the reins loose on the mare's neck for her to pick her own way, which she did with great judgment, stepping light as a shadow among the shadows. THE CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE.

THE BUSINESS MAN
by Oney Fred Sweet

He Intended to Visit His Son in Camp and Slap Him On the Back and Call Him "Dick."

NATHAN WOOD was 50. He wore a black linen suit of clothes that was cool and would not show the dust. He wore a collar that fitted his fat neck comfortably. He wore a straw hat that was neither in style nor out. He had a good appetite. He slept the moment he threw himself on the bed at night.

Mr. Wood was clean shaved, slightly bald. He sold farm tractors. He was traveling through the south on a double mission. He was out to dispose of as many tractors as possible, and he planned to visit his son in camp at Greenville, S. C.

Leaving Chicago, Mr. Wood headed straight for Montgomery, Ala. He found Montgomery flushed with wartime prosperity. The old town was full of soldiers. He ate his dinner at one of the Greek restaurants—for there was not a town in the south where Greek had not met Greek and started a restaurant—and opposite him sat the man who was to act as his agent in the territory.

"Malbey," announced Nathan Wood, stirring the ice in his tea, "we're going to revolutionize this country with the tractors. You have in the past, I believe, depended wholly on the Negroes to cultivate your fields down here."

"Yas, sah," agreed Malbey, "we've depended right smaht on the niggahs."

Malbey had spent his life in the south. He had been a part of the section all during its struggle following the civil war when it had suffered from the sudden change in system forced upon it. He had spent his boyhood on a cotton plantation—the big house amid its hundreds of acres, the row of Negro cabins. He had known the long years when the section had lain dormant, when regret for what had been and bitterness toward what had happened had stifled progress. And he had witnessed the recent awakening—the discovery that there were other crops beside cotton, the installation of mills, the migration of men from the north, the passing of prejudice.

"It's my opinion that you folks down here have clung too long to sentiment," went on Nathan Wood. "You're hitting your pace now. The south's coming into its own now along new lines. You'll find the country ripe for my tractors."

"We're coming along," agreed Malbey. "Everybody's got money heah now. The camps have helped a heap, too."

"I guess I told you that I've got a boy at Greenville," said Wood briskly. "Fine boy! Great opportunity for him. Six months more down here and he'll have a commission. Takes after me—all business."

"How long do you all think the war'll last?" inquired Malbey.

"Mmmm," laughed Wood. "Some little time I should say. Do you know we're the bankers of the world right now? Mills are working overtime. Great period for tractors these next few years."

The two men took the train next morning, and over in Georgia the train stopped at a little town called Andersonville. Nathan Wood had been studying the fields under the hot sun. He became irritated when the train remained at a standstill.

"Reckon you all know what there is heah?" queried Malbey.

"Not much of a town," assured Nathan Wood.

"Ovah on that hill there's thousands and thousands of Yankees buried," said Malbey. "Thought you all knew—the site of Andersonville prison."

"Never was much on history," admitted Nathan Wood. "Always been pretty busy."

"We might walk ovah," suggested Malbey. "Conductah says we'll be heah an houah."

Malbey led the way down the red road. The two men passed a couple of Negro shacks, pickaninnies in the doorways. Then they came to the hill.

"I know the no'th used to feel pretty ha'd the way the boys died off heah," said Malbey. "Heah ran the old stockade. Theah was 35,000 Yanks inside theah fifty yeahs ago. But we didn't have enough food foh ah own boys, and no medical skill like they have today. An' the no'th wouldn't exchange prisonahs. I've heard my pap say if the no'th had been down heah in the same fix it would have beed bad, too."

"Oh, well it was all fifty years ago," finished Nathan Wood. "Is that the Dixie highway over there? Fine strip of road!"

"Just inside that brick wall," Malbey went on, "the boys are all buried." He led the way to the wall. Under the great trees in which the birds trilled there stretched row upon row of slabs. "They was from Ohio, and Iowa, and Illinois, and Pennsylvania, and all those states up theah," finished Malbey. "It was tough. We didn't undahstand each othah very well those days. Both sides fightin', fightin' foh an idea."

"We don't want to miss that train, Malbey," remarked Nathan Wood, glancing at his watch. "The price I gave you on that small tractor is only in case you can't make a sale otherwise. With all the prosperity they're having down here you ought to get a top figure every sale."

A day or two later the pair were driving near Augusta, Ga. Malbey touched Nathan Wood on the arm in a hint to bring the car to a stop.

"Ovah theah, that strip of green by the rivah, is wheah they used to fight duels when men used to settle theah disputes that way," he pointed out. "Sounds strange now, don't it? And across in those cliffs the Ku Klux Klan used to meet. Those wah serious days, Mistah Wood. And off theah a few miles Sherman marched to the sea."

"All of that stuff has nothing to do with selling tractors," remarked Nathan Wood. "This is a practical age—a business age."

"Yas," agreed Malbey, "but it's an age that'll soon pass. Maybe the Lo'd intends us to just go on reapin' and reapin'—maybe He don't. You see they was so many yeahs down heah when we all had such a long chance to think. You have different thoughts when you've had everything swept away than you do when the only worry you've got is whethah youh steak is cooked done enough o' not. But I noticed the nightingales kept right on singin' and the roses kept on bloomin' all those yeahs when we didn't know just which way to tu'n. And those who went through the worst of it, Mistah Wood—they ahe mostly gone now."

"The tractor's going to take the place of the Negro," broke in Wood. "You said yourself the Negroes were all going north. We'd ought to have had these tractors fifty years ago. The west has had its boom. Now the south's getting it. They tell me that a lot of these towns have doubled in population the last few years."

"It suah is ma'velous," nodded Malbey. "I can remembah when the south didn't want to change. The old days died ha'd, Mistah Wood. They died ha'd. You all will see youh boy in a few days now."

"A great boy!" laughed Wood. "All business, that boy. Soon as he gets through with his army life down here I'm going to put him in the tractor business. He writes me the army's making him husky. I'll surprise him at camp. Won't let him know I'm coming. Before he knows I'm there I'll slap him on the back and yell 'Dick!' He'll be glad to see the old man. I'll have to shell out, too. Great boy for spending money."

They chugged back into town.

"Geo'ge Washington went to chu'ch theah once," pointed out Malbey.

"Wonder what he'd have thought about one of our tractors," mused Nathan Wood.

"I reckon he thought his day was just as sma't and impo'tant as we think ours is," answered Malbey.

"I guess their methods were pretty crude," asserted Nathan Wood, lighting a cigar. "Success, I should say, is all a matter of seeing a demand for a thing and then meeting the demand. When people have things go wrong in this world, it's mostly their own fault. It's lack of foresight. I wish you weren't quite so odd, Malbey, about thinking about things that are dead and over with and worlds to come. You'd make a better tractor salesman if you got more down to things as they are right here and now. You were recommended to me highly and no doubt you have the confidence and the acquaintance of the people of your territory. But quit mooning. Go out after the business and let the days that are gone and the days to come take care of themselves. This is the only world we really know about. We're hit by a great wave of prosperity. We've got every other country on the globe on its knees to us. We're the chosen bunch and it's going to keep right on that way."

"You're used to having things go your way, Mistah Wood."

"I make 'em go my way. It's all within ourselves. I don't owe my success to anybody. I saw what tractors were going to be and I got into 'em."

The camp at Greenville was some three miles from town, and Wood and Malbey drove out on a sultry evening. The tents stretched gray upon a plateau.

"It's going to do the kid good here," chuckled Nathan Wood, twisting his cigar in his lips.

"Just tell him his father's here," smiled Nathan Wood to the clerk at headquarters. "Wood's my name—Nathan Wood of the Excelsior Tractor company, Chicago. You've got a great camp here."

The clerk was running through his papers.

"Richard Wood?" inquired the clerk at length.

"Well, we always called him Dick," smiled the father.

"His regiment sailed yesterday," monotoned the clerk.

"Sailed! He hadn't been here a month," gasped Nathan Wood.

"We're sending 'em over pretty fast lately," the clerk answered mechanically. "And, from reports, we can't send 'em any too fast."

Night came on before Nathan Wood and Malbey reached town. The stars came out and the nightingales sang off in the blackness of the trees. Nathan Wood had not slapped his son on the back. He had not surprised him by yelling "Dick!"

The stars blinked. They were blinking out there at sea. They were blinking above the trenches over there in Picardy. They were blinking as they had when men and women had first sought the country's shores to live their brief years according to the dictates of their consciences. They were blinking as they would be blinking a thousand years hence.

THE CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE.

Thirty Days by Jack Lait

She Wanted at Least That to Make Up Her Mind.

A PARTICULARLY fussy customer, trying dozens of suits before she selected one, whereas she was so homely that it didn't really matter which one she selected, had detained Myrtle Crawford, model in James & Younger's department store, far beyond her accustomed luncheon hour. The woman wanted to see each suit on Myrtle, which was truly a waste of time, for the way Myrtle looked in the suits had little bearing on the way she would look in them. However, the motto of the store was, "The customer is always right," so, all right.

When the old bird had finally made her choice, picking the suit in which she would appear most unattractive, Myrtle hurried for her hat, and took it on the double quick, for the Tintray cafeteria, her noonday club and mess hall.

Every other time she had been there, at the high peak of the orthodox midday meal congestion, she had crowded and strained her way through the pipe lined trenches to the platforms where foods were obtainable, and had then shoved and writhed her way to one of the chairs at one of the populated tables. But this time the place was almost desolated.

She was alone at the table built for twenty. For once she had elbow room, and she let that help to compensate for the disadvantages of the late comer. She put her right arm squarely on the table and let it luxuriate, for on any other day if she had done as much she would have had her wrist in the chicken pie of the lady two chairs away. Then she started to let out the left arm, too; but it met something solid. She turned.

There sat Harry Clayton, owner of the Tintray cafeteria, who, now that the trade had come and gone, was about to negotiate his own lunch. He had pussyfooted up in that moment when Myrtle had been preoccupied on the other side. And there he was.

For a year or more there had been a nodding acquaintance between the host and the guest, the proprietor and the patron. Clayton believed in being genial and hospitable; Myrtle believed in answering all respectful and respectable smiles, and meeting half way any overtures on the broad roads of life that made for amicable relations between pilgrims thereupon.

"You're late today, Miss Crawford," said Clayton, by way of paving the way.

"Yep. You could shoot a cannon through here an' not hit anybody but me an' you," rejoined Myrtle, by way of stepping out on the paving with one foot ready to go on and the other ready to pull back.

"I'm glad," said Clayton. "I often wanted to sit and have a quiet little chat with you, but it can't be done when the panic is on, between 12 and 1, while we feed the animals."

"I got stuck," said Myrtle. "A cross-eyed Jane with freckles took two hours buyin' a walkin' suit, so she could go walkin' an' scare innocent children to death."

"You're a saleslady?"

"No—just a dummy. They don' trust me with the high science o' separating the boobs from their husbands' hard earned dough. I'm just a come-on. I put on the suit and they think they'll look like me in it—just like the rest o' the three shell workers, when they send a decoy to make a bet and he wins, which makes the yokels think they can make a bet an' win, too."

"I see—a model. I should have known."

"An' why should you o' known?"

"Because you have the beauty and the figure. I don't blame the other women, the less fortunate ones, for wanting to look like you."

"Say—for a fish peddler an' bean merchant you're there with the breezy ozone. I see a sign there what says, 'We Serve Hot Things Hot, and Cold Things Cold, as They Should Be.' Well, I'll say you serve hot air cold, which maybe is the way that should be."

"O, no, Miss Crawford. I never was more sincere in my life. I think, and I have so thought from the first time you ever entered the doors of the Tintray, that of all the hundreds of girls I have ever seen here you are the most beautiful."

"Wow! Have a cup of coffee—on me!"

"Please don't kid me, and don't misunderstand me. I have waited a long time to say this: I think you're the loveliest girl that ever I laid my two eyes on."

"Fine! An' I think you dish up the best chipped beef 'in town for 8 cents the plate load; that makes everything even."

"No, it does not. If you'll let me, I'll just talk along, and maybe what I'm going to say might please you."

"All right—you may shoot when ready."

"Well, I don't know just how or where to begin. You see, it's kind of a strange thing to do, to sit here the first time you and I really ever had anything to say to each other, and then to try to say what most men only say once in their lives, to only one woman—to the one woman."

"I got you. Maybe most men, as you say, only pull that stuff once in their life. But most women hear it more than once, so I s'pose there are more men saying it than there are women hearing it to go 'round. What you want to say is that you've looked 'em all over, sized 'em all up, an' decided on li'l Myrt against the field."

"Exactly. You're a great help to me already. We ought to get along famously—you read my thoughts."

"Say—what makes you think a woman can get along with a man if she can read his thoughts? Most women that get along with a man at all get along becus they haven't the faintest notion of his thoughts, and never will have."

"Not in this instance. If you could read all my thoughts you'd see there that I think you the most wonderful girl in the world, that I—that I care for you—very much."

"Gently, mister. I like the way you say that, and when a man says such as that an' makes me like it he's going some an' he's some goer. You're makin' your drive through my weakest line o' defense."

"Why offer resistance? An honorable surrender would be accepted with full military courtesies."

"The old guard has fought, has run, but never yet surrendered, Gen'ral Clayton. I been gassed an' bombed an' besieged an' run into pockets an' grenaded at from above an' blew up from underneath. But I'm still holdin' out, still defiant an' independent, still fightin' for the freedom o' the single seas. I take it, by the way, your brilliant campaign is d'rected against my stand on that subjec'—I wouldn't hardly play you for a dirty fighter, even if you are the enemy."

"My war aims are as you say. I want to drive you out of your own land—the land of misshood, and make you my prisoner in the beautiful country of Missispotamia."

"Thanks. And what are your peace terms?"

"Fifty-fifty, and a treaty of offensive and defensive alliance for life, merger of the two governments into one empire, ruled by the king of love."

"Hear, hear. No more enticin' proposition was ever made by a civ'lized monarch. An' I appreciate it. An' I wanna say that for the boss of a san'widge foundry you're a superior sort an' a oasis on the desert o' snipers, double dealers, camouflage workers, an' mine layers.

"But—O, yes, there's a but—there's got to be. But, as I was sayin', as allurin' as your offer is, it's mighty hard for me to bow my proud blond head to a king, even to the king o' love. Y'see, I've had my freedom so long I guess it's just become a part o' me. O, I know this wouldn't be no slavery nor oppressive domination, but them that love freedom like I do love it just becus it's freedom, not necessarily becus they're gettin' any special somethin' out of it.

"Liberty is a kind o' nut mania with me. It keeps me hustlin' an' worryin', for freedom is sometimes a mighty expensive luxury to keep. But it was about the same with our folks in '76. It might o' been a whole lot more comf'table for the people in the colonies to wink at a few li'l things they didn't like, in return for which they had the p'tection of a rich an' powerful nation. But that wasn't what they craved.

"They took on a war an' a lot o' suff'rin' becus what they wanted was freedom, not convenience.

"Now, get me straight. I don't mean that all my life I'm gonna up an' take this stand, that I mustn't marry becus it's contrary to my ideas o' livin' a life of independence. I'm gonna say yes to some guy some day so fast an' sudden it'll make his head spin. But, when I do that, it's gonna be becus I'd rather be his than my own. An' that's about all there is in this world—doin' the things you wanna do. Oh, by that I don' mean the things you're tempted to do; I mean the things you wanna do after you feel an' know they're the things to do. An' marryin' is one o' these.

"I hope it's my luck to some time run smack into the open arms o' the one man that can make me want him that way. I'm no salamander, Mr. Clayton; an' I'm no fish, neither. For a girl whose never been in love I got a pretty distinc' notion o' what it's like—what it's gotta be like before I take it for the real goods.

"I don't wanna string you along, or play you, or stall you. Now, I don't mind tellin' you I kind o' like you. But likin' a man an' marryin' him is far from bein' out o' the same bag.

"Tell you what let's do: I don't know how long this affection you claim for me has been gnawin' at you. I hope, an' I'm ready to believe you're altogether on the level with it. I peg you for that kind of a man. If I didn't you'd have got a mighty swift good bye, an' lost a steady cust'mer. So I give you credit for hon'rable intentions an' all o' that.

"But, to be brutal about it, I never give you a tumble before on any such lines as you opened up t'day. You got to lemme turn this over in my skull a while. I will say you're the likeliest suspect yet, of all the men what have been either kind enough or fresh enough to start a net after me. If that's encouragin,' you're more than welcome. You're the first one I ever asked a continuance for or from.

"Now, I'm in here ev'ry day. Up to now I been lookin' past you an' you, if I may believe it, have been devourin' me with your lovin' glances, all unbeknownst to me. You hardly knew me an' I knew you less than that. After this li'l chat it oughta be all diff'rent.

"We'll go into a sort o' trial courtship, limitin' the workin' hours thereof to the thirty minutes I spend in here ev'ry noon. With a newer an' keener int'rest, one in the other, we oughta be able to get a viewpoint on each other from an entirely new slant.

"Let's not make no love, let's not be jealous of each other, let's not try to bust through the terms o' the arrangement—just go along that way, smilin' pleasant an' driftin'. By the end o' say thirty days, then I'll phone you an' you can come to my house some night, an' then we'll talk it all over, nice an' quiet, an' I'll tell you the biggest yes or a polite no.

"It's gonna take a li'l stamina not to wanna knock such a deal as that off its edge. Before the thirty days is past you'll either get impatient or tired, an' I may either crave a commutation o' sentence for good behavior or plead guilty an' take life.

"How about it, Mr. Clayton? What say?"

"Well—it's an interesting and unusual proposition. But then, you're an interesting and unusual girl.

"I'd rather you'd have me now, here, today. We wouldn't have to get married immediately, of course, but the understanding——"

"Nope. When that understandin' comes I wanna marry as soon as my feet can waddle me to the altar. I've put in many a year o' singleness, an' I'm willin' to add on many more. But, when I get all made up to be a wife, I'm gonna want speed an' no delay. Long engagements seems to me a horror. What good are they? What's gained by them? If two people wanna wait an' make up their minds if they wanna marry each other, well, I say wait, becus it's a mighty important decision. But if they once do make up their minds, what's there to wait for?

"No, the night you come for your answer, come ready to go through on short notice —in case we're goin' through, becus if by then I wanna, an' you still wanna—well, let's; huh?"

"I accept," said Clayton. "I think your spirit is right. Of course, I wouldn't want to marry you if you weren't convinced that I am the only man, just as I am now satisfied that you are the only girl. I don't quite see just what you are going to find out in a month——"

"Oh, it ain't information I want. I just want time an' a chance to nurse the thought, to imagine we're married an' try to see how it'll feel, to argue with myself an' to get used to the idee. Don't feel you're on approval, or anything, an' that at the end o' the month I'm gonna notify you that the goods is o. k. an' you can charge 'em, or that I decided to return the merchandise an' would please like to be credited with the item.

"No, nothin' like that. You've about done your part, an' you've handled it mighty sweet an' manly. The rest is up to me—oh, not to a whim; I maybe can't make this clear to you, an' you may not get me, but all my life, since I come out o' short skirts, I've had marriage flung at me, pushed in under the door, brung on a silver platter, stuck under my nose. An' never before have I had any hunch at all to close my hand on it an' grasp it.

"Now that, at last, somethin' o' that nature don't roll off me like a pea off a boardin' house knife, I gotta take time to c'lect my wits; I'm scared. Am I hit, am I weakenin', is it becus you're the right man, or is it becus I'm kind o' tired t'day an' need sympathy? Or what?

"I'd hate to make a mistake now, after all the false moves I've sidestepped, an' find that becus of a temp'rary humor I hooked myself up for life. That wouldn't be fair to me nor to you. Don't give me a chance for a comeback or an out. Lemme digest this, an' if after that I say you can have me, well, you'll have all o' me, an' for all time."

"That's a good way, ain't it?"

"The best way. And I agree thoroughly with you. You quite floor me with your logic and the properly weighty significance that you attach to surrendering your heart. A good woman should do that only once—and then, forever.

"I'm glad to find that my instinct in this episode, when I scarcely knew you at all, was sound. You might have been frivolous and unstable. In such event, I suppose, I would have cared for you anyway. That is how it is when one is hit. That is how you will find it when you are hit—you'll hope for the best, but you'll want some man as he is, however he is.

"I wish you as good luck as I have had, Miss Crawford, when that happens. I hope that the man will surprise you with his virtues, his character, and his understanding.

"What the outcome will be, I don't know, of course. You know what I hope it is to be. But, in either result, I want you to know that I admire you, respect you—and adore you."

"Look out—you mustn't do that. That's out for thirty days. If I let you go on that way I'm afraid I won't last thirty days.

"Now, here's my hand on it; until a month from t'day, no mushy talk, no sighs o' distress, no languishin' looks—back or forth.

"Let's be cold an' careful for thirty days. If we can love each other after that, well it's a success."

He took her hand as she arose, and he held it tight and long. She reproved him with an expression.

"I'm not backsliding," he hurriedly protested. "It begins now—after that handhold. Now, let us shake hands merely as friends, partners in a new deal."

He took her hand again, and, this time, held it only a moment and possessed it with what might have been platonic pressure.

"You're on," said Myrtle, and then she crossed to the cashier's window and paid her 24 cent check.

"'Lo, Myrt," said Mrs. Crawford, when her darling came home after work that evening. "How'd ev'ything go t'day?"

"Oh, I don' know, ma. Either ev'ything did go, or—well, for a month don't mind anything I do or say or look."

"Why, child—what's the matter?"

"Can't tell; have to wait for the sym'toms to develop. But p'pare for the worst."

"Heavens! What is it?"

"Nothin', yet—but it may be—it may be——"

"What, dearie? What, hun? What may it be—what——"

"The lastin'est, lingerin'est fever of 'em all. Love. Maybe."

so the rear side of a big tree, and leaving the mare standing, for he had taught her not to stir except at his signal, and no stone horse could have been more faithful to its post, the creature was that intelligent, he walked quietly up to the nearest window, gently pried out a wad of rags, and peeped in.

"The place was dark and soundless; it was like looking into a chimney hole. He had his hand upon his tinder box to strike a light when a faint noise gave him pause; it was a footstep, not within the room, as he made out, after listening a moment, but somewhere at a distance in the house. It drew nearer, and now he saw a light shine, and vanish, and return upon the dark floor; he snatched up the roll of rags, and thrust it back in place, leaving only an eye-hole, and as he did so a door in the opposite wall opened on screaming hinges, and the woman he had seen that day stood upon the threshold. She held a candle, screening it from the draught with her hand; before her the shadows fluttered from floor to ceiling like live things; behind darkness fell solid as a curtain. The room, he could see, was a large one, its walls paneled with black wood, that here and there where the candle rays struck upon the moldings showed a needle streak of light. She went straight to a table in the middle of it and set the candle down—and then, sir, for an instant, Jerry Dart saw no more of her nor the room, for, by the Lord Harry, there upon that table lay the treasure!

"He stared with all his eyes; he had very near exclaimed aloud, and no wonder! The heap of money and jewels on the table must mean a greater sum than he had ever seen in one place together before in his life, much less handled. He could catch the gleam of many colored precious stones; a broad belt of filigree silver stuck with turquoise straggled over the edge of the table; and when she laid down the candlestick she disturbed a little tower of gold coins, so that one or two of them dropped and rolled around the floor. She neither looked after them nor made any motion to pick them up, and this was so strangely counter to Jerry's notions of a miser's behavior that it drew his attention from the treasure.

"She looked at the things on the table for a while, now and then touching or turning over a ring or bracelet, but without any sign of interest. Once she picked up a watch with a rich cluster of seals dangling from it, held it a minute, then laid it down with a sigh. He noticed she wore a dark, sodden bandage around one wrist. At last she gathered the stuff together in a close pile, as if preparing to carry it elsewhere, and just as she did so the candle, fanned by some chance gust, went out.

"Jerry, who had been meditating a spring through the window and upon her before she could stir or cry out, fell back, disconcerted. He heard her exclaim, then fumble in the dark, muttering to herself; in a moment she said, wearily, under her breath: 'Eh, I may as well go get the flint and steel first as last, I suppose.' And again there was the sound of the hingles and the door closed.

"To tell the truth, Jerry was a little relieved at her departure; he had no great relish for offering violence to a woman, being rather fond of the sex than otherwise, and she was a wretched sort of creature after all. But now that the coast was clear for a moment, it behooved him to make haste. He laid hands on a board nailed over one side of the lower sash, and with more noise than he liked to make, tore it loose. He let it drop upon the turf, and, taking hold of the inside framework, swung himself over the sill. He was a lithe, slender man, and landed on his feet like a cat, pulled himself together breathing a little hard after the effort, and stood listening.

"The house was quiet; Jerry felt for his tinder-box and remembered he had laid it on the window ledge when the old woman entered with her light. He hastily ran a hand along the sill and got a nasty scratch on the thumb from a piece of broken glass, but no tinder-box. He must have knocked it to the ground in climbing in. However, that was a slight loss; he knew he could make his way to the table and back even in the dark without mishap; he had marked its position accurately. And then, as he took the first step, binding up his thumb (which bled pretty freely) in the meanwhile with his handkerchief, he distinctly heard some one moving along the wall to his right, at the other end of the room.

"He stood motionless, reasoning with himself, holding his own breath. The house was old; doubtless it swarmed with rats, doubtless its decaying timbers creaked to every whiff of wind. He set his jaw, and stole a step forward. Somebody on his right seemed to move almost at the same instant, and, half a second after, the one on the left, like an echo.

"Again he stood still, striving to collect himself; no rat, no wind that ever blew made that noise. But, if it was men, how had they got into the room? They were not there when the woman came, he could swear to it. It was scarcely possible they lay in ambush for him—how should they know anything about him? Then what were they doing feeling their way about in the dark? They were two to one; he might fire—and bring the neighborhood about his ears! Or, he might escape the way he came—and leave the treasure! He took another step; the one on the right shuffled forward, grasped at the wall, so that Jerry heard his nails rattle upon the woodwork, and let his breath out in a low, wheezing groan.

"Sir, Jerry Dart was a brave man; there was no room for cowards in his trade; but at that, his knees went to water. Terror took him by the throat; the sweat ran on him, his teeth smote together. And, 'God!' he thought, 'if it touches me!'

"It passed, the feeling passed. He was no child to be afraid of bogies in a dark room, but a hardy, determined man, armed and cool; and there was a fortune lying almost within his grasp. It would have taken more than a parcel of ghosts, it would have taken a fiend from the pit to scare him from that treasure. He challenged them. 'Who's there?' says Jerry, hoarse and resolute, and he cocked his pistol. The snap of it in that uneasy hush sounded like the note of doom. 'Answer!' says he, 'or by G—— I'll put a bullet through the two of ye!'

"On top of that, almost while the words sounded, the candlelight twinkled across the floor, beneath the door; and directly after the woman again appeared. She stopped on the threshold in the same attitude, shielding the flame, and peering over it into the gloom; she did not immediately see him. Jerry found himself standing not a yard from the table; another step and he must have run into it. He cast a swift glance around; the room was empty save for the crouching and leaping shadows. There was not even another stick of furniture.

"He looked again to the woman and their eyes met. Except for a slight start, she showed no concern at his presence, though his purpose was plain enough. She walked straight towards him, holding the candle high so as to get him in the full light. Her stern face betrayed neither surprise nor fright; she was like some fierce, feeble, wild old animal. There they stood, a whole minute, facing each other across the table, where the pile of jewels gleamed eerily. Then she spoke:

"'Who are you, and what do you want!'

"Jerry released the cock and dropped his weapon back in place. He had gotten himself in hand again and grinned as he answered her:

"'I'm most sorry to inconvenience you, ma'am, but I've taken a liking to these trifles o' yours, and as I judge they can't be of much use to you, why——' and he made a motion towards the treasure.

"She set the candle down and eyed him steadily, as not quite understanding.

"'You mean this?' she said, pointing to the stuff in her turn.

"'Highly regrettable, ma'am, I'm sure,' said Jerry, who prided himself on his manners, and he began to help himself. 'I must warn you not to scream or otherwise raise a rumpus, as that would lay me under the painful necessity of forcing you to silence—' and there he stopped, for it struck him there was something very peculiar about the feel of the watch which he had just taken up. He weighed it in his hand; he held it under the light—and uttered an oath of astonishment. It was a pinchbeck trifle, a child's toy, tricked out with tinsel and gilt foil, such as one may buy at any fair for sixpence! He swept the heap to left and right, rummaging. The jewels were neither more nor less than bits of colored glass, the chains wax beads strung or linked with brass, the money disks of shining pewter. For this sorry trash he had risked his neck, he had been ready to take a fellow creature's life. He looked at the woman, bewildered. She bore his gaze unflinchingly. It crossed his mind that she was mad; and, again, they said she was a witch. He had heard of fairy gold——

"'Are you satisfied?' she said.

"'What trick is this?' cried out Jerry, furiously.

"'There is no trick,' said the old woman, unmoved. 'You tricked yourself. You come here to my house by stealth, in the middle of the night, believing what some fool has told you, yourself as great a fool—and now you say there is a trick!'

"'We shall see,' says Jerry, who was not one to give up easily; and he snatched the candle. 'Forward, if you please, and I'll have a look at the house. Be careful you neglect to show me nothing, not the least corner.'

"'The only treasure that I have is one that neither you nor any other man would envy me,' said the old woman. 'Look at me——'

"'Go on, and no more words!' says Jerry, pointing her to the door. Instead of obeying, however, she moved over to the wall on the right and, laying her hand on one of the panels, to his surprise, it slid back, and a black hollow gaped behind.

"'Will you go in, treasure-seeker?' she asked him.

"'I'm not to be trapped that easily, you——' says Jerry Dart (and I'm sorry to say he called her a name), 'you go first.'

"She shrugged her shoulders and stepped through the opening. He thought he heard her speak in a soothing voice to some one inside, and an instant after there began again those tremulous steps and breathings he had heard before, and a hand felt and faltered along the other side of the wall. It was a mere partition, as he now saw, made to resemble the other three walls, which he guessed to be solid. This wooden lining made the room the likeness to a huge sounding board; wherever touched, a vibration ran all about the walls from panel to panel, and the noises he had heard on the left were nothing but the echo, as it might be, of those on the right. At least, sir, this was the way my grandfather always explained it; but I've often had my doubts. It's hard to place noises in the dark, and in an unfamiliar spot; and then maybe he was a little more flustered than he cared to think himself, or tell us. Like enough, the sounds were to his right all the time. Anyway, at the moment, he thought the old woman had somehow beguiled him, and turned on her in a red hot rage.

"'Twas you, you beldam!' he cried. 'You saw me at the window——' and cursed her heartily.

"She let him curse; and when he was done, said patiently: 'Whatever it was you saw or heard it was not me. Believe me, I would not take the trouble. If you will step within,' she went on, drawing aside from the opening, 'you will see the only other person in the house alive or dead besides us two. He is quiet now; you heard me speak to him?' and seeing him hesitate (as he well might), 'Man, what are you afraid of?' she cried with so much contempt, that he plunged across the threshold in sheer bravado, holding the candle ahead of him and feeling for the butt of his pistol with his other hand.

"The room was not large; at some time long before it must have been walled off for a secret closet. There was nothing in it but a mattress on the floor in one corner, a bench, and, in the middle, standing in a litter of straw, a common wooden trestle, such as carpenters use to support a platform. On it were a saddle and blanket, and fastened to one end a big ungainly sack of burlaps stuffed out into the clumsy likeness of a horse's head, painted with staring eyes, and a shapeless mouth. The thing wore a bridle and nailed at the other end a hank of rusty yarn did duty for a tail.

"Jerry's eyes, traveling slowly past it, encountered, with a start, those of a man standing against the wall near by. He clutched something to his breast with both hands, and stared at Jerry unwinkingly with two small pale gray eyes, like specks of ground glass. He was ragged and foul; he might have been any age between 50 and a hundred. As Jerry looked, he began once more that stealthy and uncertain movement around the room, without paying any further attention to either of his visitors. Jerry turned to the woman.

"'He is mad?' he asked.

"'As you see.'

"'Is he always like this?'

"'Sometimes a great deal worse,' said the woman. 'Sometimes he is rough and bad'—she glanced at her bandaged wrist—'and then I take away his playthings—what your saw on the table. Then, afterwards, when he is good again, I give them back to him. That is what I was about to do this evening.'

"'What is that he is doing now?'

"'His pistol. I made it for him out of a block of wood. I never take that away—it makes him cry so.'

"Jerry dropped his own pistol as if it stung him. He looked again at the madman, at the play horse in its straw, horrid and silly, and his gorge rose.

"'He chooses strange toys,' he said.

"'Not so strange, if you knew his history,' says the woman. 'He is——' and here, sir, she named a name which my grandfather, even after the lapse of so many years, would never repeat. 'Let the poor wretch's memory rest,' the old man used to say. 'He's paid the reckoning.' But it was the name of a highwayman, famous in his day, whom every one supposed long since dead. And so Jerry told her at the time, wondering a little if her brain was turned, too.

"'Do you tell me that?' says he. 'That man is dead and buried at the crossroads with a stake through his heart. I have seen the place.'

"The woman shook her head. 'You've heard the story,' she said, 'how he and others were riding cross country to evade the runners that were hot upon their trail, and how he came down at a fence, his horse trampling the life from him? And how the bailiffs coming up left him for dead, and went on after his companions? And while they were busied on that the country people found and buried him without more ado?'

"'Aye,' says Jerry. 'That's the way they tell it, and no one doubts but it's true.'

"'It is, all but the last,' the woman told him. 'They left him for dead, and I, being not far, came and got him away to a secret place, and nursed him back to such health as you see. He lay unconscious a long while —six days. Then he came to this way. I had to do it alone, for sick or well, mad or sane, they would have hanged him, had he been found. Then after a while I found this place and brought him here and here we have lived in safety ever since. He thinks he is still at his old trade and hides and hoards his booty, and rides abroad on his midnight errands, and prowls by stealth like you. He is happy, after a fashion.'

"'Got Almighty!' said Jerry Dart, and wiped his forehead.

"The woman shrugged again, and snuffed the candle with her fingers.

"'You have been here—'

"'Nearly twenty years.'

"'And you alone have taken care of him all this time?'

"'Who but I?'

"'You would be safe to come out of hiding now, I think,' said Jerry.

"'Perhaps. But where should we go? This is as good a home as we could find anywhere.'

"'But is there no one you could call on, in case—in case—'

"'I have one friend,' she said. 'An idiot boy that comes sometimes and brings me broken meat and table scraps in winter; in summer, birds' eggs and fish that he has caught. I have not spoken to another human man being in five years. I had a little dog once that I was fond of. The children stoned it to death in the streets. They think I am a witch, you know.'

"There was a silence. Then Jerry said awkwardly enough, I dare say: 'If you could get some trifle that would please him, or ease yourself a little, I should be glad—'

"'Keep your money,' said the woman. 'You mean well, but we need nothing.'

"She guided him to an outside door without any more words, first carefully closing the panel on the madman. The last Jerry saw of him he was astride the hobby horse, whipping and spurring for dear life—a picture, sir, that stayed with him long, and darkened his dreams for many a night. He followed the old woman through a dozen ruinous rooms and passages, and when at length they reached the door there was the dawn; and the mare whinnied to him from her post. I have heard him say he had not tasted the fresh air with such a relish, no, not since the time he broke gaol at Newcastle!

"Well, sir, that night was the making of Cheat-the-Devil Jerry Dart. He never took another purse. And being captured shortly after, without any resistance, was had up at Brampton Assizes next July for trial; he was the kind that always had a sheet-anchor to wind'ard, as I've heard sailormen say, and, by making interest in high places, got himself pardoned off—but it was touch and go! At one time he thought it was all up and sent for the parson.

"Sir, you have seen that my grandfather was at heart a serious minded young man; and after his legal troubles were over he proved it by seeking out the quietest and most retiring spot he could find, and ending his days there in the quality of landlord of the 'Dove o' Peace,' a name which he picked out himself. He had money laid by, as I told you, and set up comfortably; married after a while, and brought up a large family in the knowledge and fear of God. He took a hand at raising his grandchildren, too, and was very strong, as I remember, 'pon the eighth commandment. Yes, sir, many's the time the old man's basted me well with a stirrup leather for nabbing apples out of Job Pennefeather's orchard."

OVER HERE — The Story of a War Bride

by Ethel M. Kelley

SYNOPSIS.

Elizabeth, on her eighteenth birthday, is a sweet little "bud" who looks on the war abroad as an irritating and necessary evil. She hopes America won't get into it—war would spoil so many things for her. And it certainly would take away Tommy, her oldest suitor, already at Plattsburg. Though she doesn't know it, she is really falling in love with Tommy. Lester, heir to millions, a pacifist, and one of Beth's suitors, proposes and is turned down, though her mother favors the match. In the meantime her interest in the war and Tommy deepens. Beth visits Greenwich village and meets the freaks. Tommy hears and is jealous. They quarrel. "Making up," they are married quietly. Her interest in the war grows deeper. Tommy gets his captain's commission and sails for overseas duty.

NINTH INSTALLMENT.

SEPTEMBER.

"Do you talk that way to Roland?" I asked her.

"Well, you know how men are," she said, "they are crazy to get into any kind of excitement without stopping to think how much trouble they are going to have before they get out of it."

"Do you talk that way?" I said.

"Do you?" she asked.

"I don't feel that way," I said.

"But you don't talk the way you do feel—whatever it is—to any man or boy, do you?"

"Pretty near," I said, "to Tommy."

"O, go on! I'll bet you've got the biggest kind of a secret from him right now."

I opened my mouth to reply—but what's the use of trying to answer "yes" or "no" to any question of Dolly's? Conversation, after all, isn't a mere kind of trick to catch you in.

"I heard of a new atrocity the other day," she continued flightily, which is her fashion, "a horror! Want to hear about it?"

"No," I said, "I don't."

"I don't think marriage has improved you a great deal, Betty"—I hate being called Betty—she said, "to put it frankly."

"Well, don't put it frankly, then," I said.

Whereupon our conversation terminated, with mutual ill feeling.

Billy Douglas is circulating around in the same breathless and intriguante fashion. Robert has not yet been called—to Eileen's shame. She did so want him to enlist and get a good start at something before it came to his hanging on like this. But Billy wouldn't have it.

I don't know what is going to happen to Billy. She has so much good in her that I am interested to see if any of it will now be brought out. She is being very nice to Marcella Harcourt, whom she met at my house for the first time early in the spring. I'm glad of that, for Marcella is a nice girl, and her heart is broken, though she is filling up her life quite capably with other things. If she were married and had Obadiah to look forward to—would she feel better or worse? Better, I think.

New York meantime is full of Japanese and all Fifth avenue is strung with moon shaped lanterns and cleverly arranged decorations. Viscount Ishii is making speeches and genuflections all over the place about our polite action in getting into the fray. Since but a short time ago there was a good deal of conjecture about the prospect of Japan engaging in a little fray with us on the side this is gratifying, though, of course, it doesn't really mean a thing. So few things do along that line. The perfidous Germans would have sent a commission over here if it had been possible, I suppose. Speaking of perfidious Germans, fraülein was over to see us the other day. We had a fight over Sweden, which I know nothing at all about, and a slight argument about the kaiser's God, for which I could have had her arrested if I had had a mind to. She certainly can be disagreeable about England—good old England—and she is.

"The whole point of the matter is, fraülein," I said, "that you come from a race of—of scientific barbarians, and you don't have any imagination about people whose feelings are naturally refined," and with that I left her. It is the whole point, too. I was so mad because she said that the Germans had practically captured the Gulf of Riga that I could have done anything to her. I am afraid poor Obadiah has chosen one very belligerent parent at least.

A letter from Tommy at last—opened by that horrid, never to be forgiven or tolerated creature—the censor. Tommy's letters to me have to be opened and read and words scratched out in them by that abominable person, and it isn't always the same censor either. I can't tell now what certain spots on the letters mean; whether they are Tommy's bread and butter or his tears or merely traces of an official lack of refinement against which there is no defense.

"Somewhere in France." Well, he landed, and he loves me, censor or no censor. He isn't much of a describer, of course, but I gather that a lot of other people landed with him or were already there when he arrived! He didn't have much excitement going over, but the food was unexpectedly good and the boat unexpectedly unsteady—in other words, he was seasick, though he didn't say so, and got better and ate the food after a suitable interval. He heard tales of pseudo lifeboats with fake men in them concealing periscopes and torpedoes in their midst, and was a little disappointed at not sighting one. Well, thank heavens, he didn't!

What will he see before he gets home to me? I refuse to read about the war any more, but once or twice in book stores I've snooped about the tables and read the literature on the covers of some of the personal narratives. "Two years in hell and back with a smile." Dozens of books by men who have come back. Tommy will come back, of course. I have never had the smallest moment of doubt about that, but sometimes I get into a regular cowardly panic about what he may get into before he does. Well, there will be some months of training before he gets anywhere near the front lines—and in those months what may not happen? I have done my duty. I have.

Supposing peace coming now is only a patched up peace and our not finishing the business now will mean that war will break out again in a worse form? Tommy and I might not live to see it. We'd have our time together, but Obadiah might have to go to war in that case. Well, that's a thought. Still, Obadiah is only Obadiah—and Tommy is Tommy.

Sometimes I get to wondering if I'm grown up enough to love Tommy the way I do without—spontaneous combustion or something. I hadn't got my hair up on the top of my head when I knew that Tommy was all there was to it. I knew it in my soul before I ever acknowledged it to my brain. In fact, I told him so before I ever told myself.

Now I can just barely manage to live without him. I can manage, but it's rather uphill work and dwarfs everything else. My love grows bigger all the time, and I am a very small container for it. I have awful hours sometimes when I dread the suffering of caring the way I care, and am going on caring. Just the waiting around for letters and the longing—longing for my dearest. Even a grown-up woman would have all she could do to stand it. There are lots of other girls' husbands "Somewhere in France," but they can bear it because their husbands are only commonplace husbands. Mine is Tommy.

"'Nother Place in France." He loves me just as much. It's sweet of him to ignore the censor on my behalf. I guess he knows I couldn't live if he didn't. He seems to be in a kind of jumble of mud and getting settled, and meeting all kinds of natives from all the countries of the earth, zouaves and Sengalese and the foreign legion—whatever they may be—and hobnobbing with majors and staff colonels and people like that. Anyhow, he describes them with considerable pride.

He makes light of any discomforting experiences he might have had. So far no cooties. The soldiers I have read letters or reports from on the subject take these animals very much as a matter of course, but they are one of the things I can't help thinking about in the tabooed midnight hours. It doesn't seem possible that Tommy could be going to have to suffer from them. Maybe he won't.

He's heard shell fire in the distance like a subway explosion and didn't mind it. His letter was so sort of fresh and crisp sounding that I had a kind of thrill of joy at having let him go. Supposing he was just plodding along here, and then got drafted and then was dragged around this country—half unwillingly because he hadn't had the strength of mind to take the initiative. Oh! No, if you're going to play ball, you want to play ball—that's all.

Tommy thinks the whole outlook over there is very confused but very promising. The men are crude and untutored—but keen. They'll lick into shape like a breeze, and then "Over the top and give 'em hell," and it's oblivion or Berlin for poor little Fritzie.

Oh! Obadiah! Obadiah! if it wasn't for you I could get in line for a French cross of my own. As it is, we'll let your father do the honors for the family. He's capable of it. I guess I've never called him that before, but that's what he is, Obadiah, your patriarchal, and I trust your also fond and doting parent.

Lester came around to see how I was geting on. He made strange financial allusions at intervals from which I presently inferred that he wanted to present me with some money.

"Lester," I said, "What do you think I am? An east side woman in a shawl?"

"I can't tell you what I think you are," he rejoined with some spirit, "you're married now."

"And a good job, too," I murmured.

"I don't care how facetious you may get," he said, "I just want you to know that I've come into some money of my own, and it can be loaned to you, and never be repaid, of course, in time of need. If anything should happen to your father's business—"

"My father's business?" I said.

"All business excepting munitions are on the blink, you know."

"Have you heard of anything happening to my father's business?" I asked, remembering father's expression of late.

"Well rumors get around, you know," he said.

"Well, Lester," I said, "if the time ever comes when I have to have money for anything special, and I can't get it of any one else I will appeal to you."

"Thank you," he said huskily.

"But don't you see, Lester, it would be a queer thing to do. I like—love my husband just the way that you said—that you—"

"I know you do," Lester said. "That's the reason that I want to help you. I—I want you to be happy."

"Lester," I said, "I've never half appreciated you."

"That's all right," he said.

But it isn't all right. I have broken Lester's heart, and Tommy, my liege lord and sovereign master, has my heart with him—over there, "Somewhere in France."

I think life is tragic.

. . . .

Well, the other night I got out of my warm bed with the comforting blue puff folded over me like an envelope of which I was the long and I trust somewhat interesting contents, and closing the window at which a blizzard was entering with undue celerity, I sat down in my kimono and bare toes, and wrote Tommy about Obadiah. The time had come to do it. I couldn't have done it before or put it off any later.

"Dear Tommy," I said. "Please close your eyes and imagine your lawful wedded lady friend in her lawful accustomed place telling you something; and please imagine what it is." A line of stars. "Have you?" More stars. "Are you glad? I am, I think. Please tell me in so many words that you know what I mean. Put it down on paper. I can't because of the censor, and I couldn't anyway.

"That's why I couldn't think of going abroad when you broached the question. That's why my health acted up so. I am perfectly normal now, however, eating, sleeping, and not worrying, and Doctor Fitch looks after me and talks things over.

"I think I know where your last letter was from. Father of course follows your supposed trail with maps all the time. Personally, I want to see you." A line of tears, which, however, I don't think spotted. "I have no secrets from you now, so I will tell you that I like you better than the war. You needn't, nevertheless, turn around and come home before you have had a crack at fräulein's compatriots. My nerve is pretty good, thank you. I guess we both meant it when we promised not to be afraid. So let's make a bargain not to worry. You are in the locket around my neck. Really in it. Am I inscribed on your identification disk or am I in the case of your wrist watch? The answer is 'neither.' I know I am beating in your heart—O! Tommy, my Tommy, you are beating in mine.

"Lovingly, the Gazelle." (I try to be a little funny at the end of my letters so he will finish them with a smile.)

"P. S. He is going to be very nice."

When I got back into bed I thought I had perhaps killed myself by writing it at all. I shivered and shook and went into a thousand pieces as I have never done before, but I suppose it was just nervousness. At any rate, I lived to tell the tale.

Roland is off to France with the artillery detachment for which he elects to be a gunner. His mother, who is very fond of him, I guess, but not very well acquainted with him on account of leading such a busy life among our well known social circles, made an awful scene on the dock and had to be gagged and bound, as it were, before they could get her home. Roland when he came here kissed my forehead and my hands and told me to be good, and I told him that next to Tommy he was the one that seemed to me to have the goods.

"Well, then," he said, "I'll deliver them."

"Cross your heart," I said.

"Cross yours," he promised.

"You're—my family Bible, you know, Beth," he said, "you—you are getting to look like a madonna now."

"I'll let you call me Beth then," I said, which is really Tommy's name for me.

"You are getting to look like a madonna."

I closed my eyes.

"Well," I said, "pray for me."

"I will," he said huskily; and I knew he would.

George is still hanging around the docks like a regular wharf rat and nothing happens to his part of the naval service. He says he would have got more out of it if he had taken service as a porter on a Fall River line steamer, but I suppose his time will come. His mother, being poor but honest like my own, seems better able to bear up under the idea than Roland's parents, though she is quite intimate with him.

Speaking of mothers, mine was very good to me when she got home from the country. She and father seemed to have a reunion over my affairs, and it gave them a great deal in common to talk over. I always like to see my dear parents getting together over something congenial. Mother was a little broken up because I hadn't found her more necessary to my scheme of existence under the circumstances, but as I pointed out to her, there was nothing to do about it except to smile and make up plenty of good looking garments.

"I'm not very close to you, Beth," she said, "you used to tell me everything."

"I don't need to tell anybody anything, now," I said. "I don't do those things that I have to confide and be forgiven for. I have put away childish things, perhaps."

"You're grown beyond me."

I kissed her but did not contradict her. I'm a war scarred veteran now in my secret soul. The war got what it was after from me. Mother's just played with it. We don't speak just exactly the same language.

"Mother," I said, "let father go."

She stared at me.

"Nonsense," she said, "there's nothing he could do at his age."

"Let him try," I said; "give him the satisfaction of finding it out for himself."

"Don't be silly," she said. "What would we do?"

"I don't know," I said, "but I'd be willing to do it if you would."

It was no use, though. Mother is perfectly sweet, and does all the minor details of her duty, but she wouldn't give up the last thing, or know that it was there to give up. She's right for her, and I am right for me, I suppose. I wish we could trade even.

There seems to be practically no sugar in the world, and one's grocer sells one a pound reluctantly. Mother has evolved a little scheme of tipping with sugar. We use as little as possible, and get it from three or four places, so now when the cook or the scrub lady or the elevator man needs a little bonus mother gives them a pound of sugar where she formerly gave them 50 cents, and they are much more grateful to her than they ever were for the mere lucre. The poor simply can't get sugar. We are beginning to have meatless days, and wheatless days, and I am so corn fed that cock-a-doodle-do will soon be my natural form of expression. Before mother came home I got the household running on this war basis. Honey, and only half the wheat we used to eat, and no meat for lunches and never any kind of waste. I am quite executive when I turn my mind to it, and though I manage to cook by the Montessori method I must say that it works fine.

Some day, some day will my Tommy be a civilian and shall we sit down to a snowy

HORSES for FRANCE

Bartlett Cormack

seem like a Frenchman. But Harris was talking again and she cut off her speculation.

"Anything you want, Myrt?" he asked. "Here!" He dived into a pocket and handed her a bill. "Run along and buy yourself a T-bone, eh?" He glanced at Miller. That gentleman's steel die face expressed annoyance at the interruption. "We're busy," apologetically went on Harris. "I was tellin' Mr. Miller about my horses. You know!" He winked at her gravely.

She nodded quickly and then, more to hide her own confusion than from any interest in the table, walked to the center of the room. The newspaper with which Harris had covered the hypodermic was a Chicago paper. The girl picked it up.

Miller gasped, once; Harris cried out. And she saw what lay beneath.

"I only wanted to look at the paper," she said. "That's nothing to jump about. God knows I haven't seen a Chicago paper—Joe! What is the matter?" His pasty face had gone a shade whiter if that was possible.

"N—nothin'," he answered shakily. "Them—them needles is full o' poison. We use 'em on—rabbits. I was afraid you'd get stuck. We use 'em on rabbits." It was the best his strained mind could do, that rabbit excuse.

"Rabbits?" incredulously.

Miller rose, the situation in hand as befitted one from the Wilhelmstrasse.

"I experiment with rabbits," he said. "I was a doctor, before the war. Now, one forgets business and does what one can for—France. I was showing Mr. Harris the needle when you came in, that's all." Retrieving the hypodermic, he resumed his chair.

"O, I see," said Myrtle nervously. Something was queer about all this; something indefinable; something foggy that she could not sense. Paper under her arm, she left them. Outside, in the hall, she paused; a headline in the paper caught her eye. It said: "Maroons Beat Illini for Championship." There had been, in the old days, a young fellow who had taken her to football games out at Stagg field. O, but it would be good to get back! . . . Words from inside the door made her hesitate as she would have gone on to her own room.

"Fool of a fool!"—in the voice of Miller. "That rabbit was a damn fool excuse! Ach Gott! You will ruin all, yet!"

"I—I know," came the voice of Harris, weakly protesting, "but, damn her, she scared me green. I—somethin's wrong in me. I can't stand a shock a-tall any more." Then silence. She heard the strike of a match—Harris seeking solace in a cigaret.

Wondering, a puzzled line between her brows, she went on to her room. Something was wrong somewhere. What? She went out to eat, still wondering.

III.

Myrtle sat with Harris at a table in the Gold room of the Parham house, waiting. Cameron, the westerner, said Harris, had promised to meet them there at 9.

"I got him in the bar," said Harris. "You should 've seen him warm up. Said he was lonely; all that line o' stuff. The poor bird will wish in the a. m. he'd stayed at Deadwood Gulch—or wherever he come from. Poor prune! Spoofin' him was like takin' candy from a kid!"

She nodded, absently tracing patterns on the cloth with her fork. A day of speculation had brought her no nearer the solution of the hypodermic needle. And, womanlike, a thing unsolved bothered her.

A tall, young fellow was moving across the room toward them. He was dressed in loose fitting serge, but as she noticed the warmth of his smile she started and recognized in him the young westerner who had brought her the paper she had dropped in River street. He came on, stopped by their table, greeted Harris, who rose effusively, clutched the fellow's outstretched hand, and made the introductions. Myrtle, her heart leaping (why? she wondered), acknowledged Mr. Cameron. He drew out his chair and sat down alongside her at the table.

"Miss O'Hara—was that your name?—and I are acquainted already," he said, smiling. "She dropped her paper in River street yesterday. I picked it up."

"Well, w-e-l-l!" cried Harris. "Slippin' somethin' over on me, eh? Know each other, eh?" He laughed good humoredly. "Well, that's fine. . . . Here, Cameron! What'll it be?"

He caught the glint of ginger ale in Myrtle's glass and ordered likewise, somewhat confused. The waiter brought his drink.

Harris rose; glanced at his watch.

"You'll pardon me a minute," he said apologetically. "I got an engagement. Be right back. You two can—er—can talk awhile."

"Well, he's—gone," said Cameron.

"Yes," agreed Myrtle. "He's gone." The thought of what he had gone to do; of the engagement that had made him go caused her to look at the young fellow before her with a new interest. She felt rather sorry, now, that he was going to lose his chance of making some money.

Good looking, he was, in a rough way; his tanned face seeming as if it might have been hewn from something firmer than mere flesh. His eyes were blue, like the summer's sky, and also, like the sky, open and frank. She admitted to herself that she already liked him.

"From the west?" she asked.

"Montana," he nodded. "Ever been there?"

"No." Then, qualifying her answer, "Only a few days. Joe and I played the Babcock theater in Billings last winter." She bit at the words the moment she spoke them, but they had gone. How, she wondered, would he eye her, knowing her to be an actress?

"Then you are that girl!" he cried, excitedly. "I knew it! That's why I smiled at you on the street. I saw you dance at the Babcock, in Billings, last winter. I thought I recognized you on the street. I went to see you three times," he finished, lamely. "You know——" He stopped, the red mounting in his cheeks.

"Yes?" she parried. She rather liked his blush; it was undeniably wholesome.

"Well——," he hesitated. "I—I guess I liked you; that's all. I thought then that I'd like to know you."

She sipped at her drink, not knowing quite how to meet that speech, really. Had any one else said it; had there been but the vaguest suggestion of a twinkle in his eye as he said it; then it would have been easy enough. She would have, as of old, dealt in repartee. But there combined in Cameron a wholesome boyish naïveté that brooked no banter. She found in him a new quality; something hard to define exactly, but something of which she was acutely conscious. Something about him; something in his frank blue eyes; or in his open-as-the-sky smile, perhaps, made her uncomfortably ashamed that she was acting the intermediary in a plan designed to bring about his losing money—his losing anything. Those of the stage, by their very profession, are made circumspect; they learn to read faces, and more often than not their readings are true judgments of character. Myrtle found in the man before her only cleanliness in mind and body; honesty; frankness of both speech and nature.

"You—well, you've got your wish," she said. "You know me now."

"Oh, but not really," he said, quickly. "This isn't knowing, this talking here. I think you've got to be away from everything with somebody to know them. Out on an island, maybe; or in the hills. I once went out with a posse after a train robber. He was supposed to be a pretty tough egg. I got him, but he shot me. Then what d'you suppose that bad egg did? Nursed me for a month! I know him. You can't know anybody in a city. There's too many things around." His earnestness brought the hint of a smile to her lips.

"There, you smiled!" he said, startlingly. "I've been wishing you'd smile. Out where I come from we all smile, all the time. Reckon we're maybe some different from you easterners."

"No," she said, slowly. "We don't smile much here. There's not time. I've almost forgotten, myself, how to—smile. One does forget, on the road." She played nervously with her glass. The conversation seemed to be getting away from her; carrying her on to subjects she didn't want to discuss. Least of all with him.

His boyishness departed for an instant as he leaned across the table to her; his eyes seemed contracted queerly, as if he was trying to read her very thoughts. Then that too disappeared and in its place came sympathetic understanding. "Tell me about yourself," he begged. "Why don't you smile? Your eyes are sad. They make me think of sheep. I've thousands of sheep; I know them pretty well."

And so, before she could check her tongue, she was telling him about herself. Why, she never knew. But that something in him seemed to say, "I know; I sympathize. Tell me about it." And so she told him.

"Not much to tell," she said. "I met Harris in Chicago a year ago. A year. It seems ten! I was working in a State street department store. It wasn't—well, pleasant. My parents were dead. Friends are difficult at best. So when he came along I—well, I went. That's all. Of course, once on the road——" She gestured meaningly.

"Yes? What then?"

"I didn't find what I expected, God knows. It was work, work, work. Then I think there was more work. Early morning trains—rehearsals—no money—late trains—cold dressing rooms—hot dressing rooms—men who tried to give me things. More men. And more work. And much disappointment. I grew to hate it; grew to wish I was back in Chicago, even in that store. Sometimes I wished I had the nerve to—use the gas." She stopped, gripping her hands. Her mind, made reminiscent, pictured many things, unpleasant things, that she had not spoken of. "It was hard," she finished. "Not much chance to smile. We're through here. Where from here I don't know."

And Cameron, listening, felt as he had when, still a small boy, his pony had broken a leg in a gopher hole. The pony had whinnied piteously then and the boy had felt barbed wire run through his heart. His mind, active as is the west's, pictured vividly the points she skipped in her story. He felt a great tenderness for her.

"And Harris?" he asked.

"O, Joe's all right. He's always acted right with me. He's got a wife, somewhere. Only he's made for that sort of life. I'm not. I love air, chickens, cows, green fields. When I was small I lived on a farm—but, well I've chosen. I'll stick."

"Listen!" His voice held a new enthusiasm as he went on. "Chuck it all! Come out west with me. Oh, I'm not making love to you. Don't think that. But there's air out there. And sheep—horses to ride—cattle. And mountains to take the conceit out of you. My mother's on the ranch. She'd take care of you. And then when you're fit again you can come back. Will you come?"

"Look out," she said, feebly. "I might take you up." Something inside her pulsed violently; her whole existence lately seemed built upon "somethings." "Funny, us talking like this," she said. She wondered, vaguely, if Harris had consummated the deal.

"But why? There's no harm. You'd grow out there. And mother——"

"Please don't talk about it," she begged. She must stop him; she wanted to go so hard. "Tell me about yourself. What brought you down to St. Paul?"

"Horses," he answered. "Horses for France—glorious horses for glorious France." She thought he eyed her with a strange intensity as he went on; as if puzzled. "One of my men generally comes down," he went on, "but it's just come lambing time and he couldn't be spared. So I came. The horses are going to help in the struggle 'over there.' I've got an older brother. He's fighting now; enlisted from Canada. He says America—United States, I mean—will be in it yet. I wanted to go, too; but I couldn't leave mother. So I'm running the place. Sometimes I 'most bawl like a baby when I think of these horses of mine going over there and getting mangled up. I know my horses. They eat sugar out of my hand. They'll all be killed. But they'll be—what is it the English say? Doing their bit?

"The last load that came down got hit pretty hard before they started. Some skunk poisoned them, here in St. Paul. The officials told me it was the work of the German propagandist spies in this country. But they didn't find the rat! We caught one of his paid men injecting serum into the horses legs with a hyp—"

"Oh!" she cried, and sat up as if shot. "O, God! That's—Quick! We've—we've got to go to them. O, hurry, please!" As his words caught and shaped themselves upon her brain and as her brain registered their meaning she felt herself shrivel within. And remembering the needle she had seen in Harris' room; remembering what she had heard behind Harris' door; seeing how susceptible she had been to the frame up—remembering all these things, she knew.

"O, hurry, hurry. Please. We've got to get to your horses. I'll explain——"

He reached across the table and caught her wrist in a vise-like grip.

"Look here," he said, and all the naïveté had gone from his eyes. "I know all this; knew it this morning. But—are you playing safe, or—straight? Didn't you know about this serum stuff?"

"No! O, no!" her eyes pleaded with him and he knew she spoke the truth.

"Thank God," he said. "I thought—But come on; we'll hurry down."

On the way to the barns she told him the whole story.

IV.

The stables were quite dark. The large door was slightly ajar. Cameron cautiously pulled it partly open.

A lighted lantern, setting on the floor at the head of one of the stalls, shed a murky glow about the place.

"Th-there he is," she whispered, and felt his hand crush into her arm as he told her to be silent. A dark figure had moved between them and the lantern; then disappeared into a stall.

"If he started at this end," muttered Cameron, "he's only just begun. Hasn't had much time." Noiselessly he slipped inside the door, cautioning the girl to stay where she was, silent.

During the pressing stillness that immediately followed, Myrtle stood outside the door, scarcely daring to breathe, her hands pressed tightly against her breasts. If he—O! She screamed when she heard cries from within the stable. Came an oath. Then a furious scuffle. Men appeared from out the gloom with pocket flashlights and revolvers in their hands.

She followed the men into the stable.

Cameron and the man who had been the black figure were struggling on the dirt of the floor. And the man was not Joe Harris. As, breathing hard, the two men rolled over and into the penumbra of lantern light she recognized Cameron's adversary as the Miller who had been the rabbit doctor. The expression on his face was almost fiendish. Myrtle sobbed.

Suddenly Cameron loosed an arm; sent it reeling into the face of the man below him. Miller choked; lay still. After a moment Cameron rose to his feet, stumblingly.

"I—I reckon I got him," he gasped, winded. "Tie him up, boys."

But Miller, shamming his loss of consciousness, was rising upon his elbow; was leveling a revolver at Cameron's back. Myrtle cried out.

"Look out!" she cried, pushing him aside. "He's got——" But her sentence was broken short by the impact of a bullet that crashed into her thigh. As the man fired she pushed Cameron, and, taking his former position, received the shot.

She swayed for one sickening minute; felt the heat of blood upon her leg; then crumpled to the floor.

. . . .

Myrtle received Cameron some days later in her room at the hospital. She had learned from her nurse of his unfailing attendance and kindness. He had brought her to the hospital; had inquired daily, and had sent flowers and magazines.

Still faint, she lay there smiling at him, her hair darkly lustrous against the white of her pillow.

"That—Miller is dead," he told her. "He knocked one of my men over with a pail and bolted. Tried to get through a stall and out a window. The horse caved in his skull. He's—well, it wasn't pretty."

"But—those men there? Where——?"

"I suppose I should have told you before," he said, flushing. "I—Well, I belong to the British volunteer secret service. I did some work in Canada for them last year. We knew about this. O, I was afraid—for you, at first."

"And Joe?" she asked.

"Harris," he went on, "was late for his appointment that night. I found him at the police station. He tried to pick a cattleman's pocket as he left the hotel. Any one knows better than to try that on a rancher! But he was lucky, at that!"

"Yes," she nodded. "I'm glad he wasn't in it."

They were silent awhile. Then, suddenly:

"Won't you come with me out west?" he asked. "I really want you—to come. There's—O, there's lots of things out there I reckon you'd like."

She searched his eyes, wondering if he in any way sensed what was in her heart. True to form he got very red about the ears and she laughed happily.

"You—you'll come?" he cried eagerly.

"And—and have your mother care for me? No mu——"

But he cried out something then and was on his knees beside her, his hand, caressingly tender, on her forehead.

"Not much is right!" he said, with conviction. "I'll tend to that!"

And then she knew that she would go.

HORSES for FRANCE

AND CONCERNING MYRT WHO WAS LONELY.

THE bills out front called her the Queen of Song and Pulchritude. St. Paul advertising is like that. Her partner, an anemic, spineless fellow, whose fingers twitched as he danced, called her Myrt. A year back, when she disposed of gloves across the counter of a Chicago department store, the other girls had called her Myrt. Then she hated the shortening of her name. But the young man with whom she sang and danced called her that when first they started out, and since he did pretty much as he pleased anyway, and as she became acquainted with things of which she was not wholly proud, she slipped into the habit of thinking of herself as Myrt—Myrt, the Queen of Song and Pulchritude.

She was pretty enough, too, in a wistfully pale way; the sort of prettiness one looks to see behind convent gates rather than footlights. Her hair was darkly lustrous, and wavy, and she put it up (adding charm thereby) in a single twist at the nape of the neck. Her eyes were dark, but dark with a clean passionateness with which was mingled a hint of weary sophistication with what she had seen of the world, and a longing for the green of lush fields and the pure air of the countryside—things as far removed from her ken as are movieized ruralities removed from the real thing.

The two, Myrtle and the man, had a song, dance, and patter specialty that for a time prospered along the smaller circuits addicted to a certain sort of vaudeville. But a day came when the fox trot and its entourage was as much a matter of course in—well, in Billings, Montana, as in New York; when the new manner of gliding and pirouetting had percolated into and taken hold of every town and borough from coast to coast. And people, the two found, will not pay to see others do what they may do themselves. So Myrtle and the man, Joe Harris, came to the Empress, in St. Paul.

The matinée lagged on. It was hot. Myrtle, withdrawing to the wings at the close of their bit, felt as if the blanket of stuffy heat that pressed her heart must surely suffocate her. As she leaned wearily against the rail that would lead her down to the dressing rooms she was conscious that out front the choky whir of the electric fans was broken by only a few dull smackings of palms. The wistful appeal of her had, she realized, been failing of late. She hadn't been "getting over" as of old. Too, she knew the reason for it all. Simply sick; sick of it all. And homesick. Weary with the futility of the whole endeavor, she went slowly down the iron steps; wanting more than anything else air—fresher, purer air; air that was free from the smell of Joe Harris' cigarets.

As she passed his dressing room he called to her. She went in. He was in his shirt sleeves, unbuttoning a shoe. She slumped into a chair.

"Well?" she asked. "What——"

"Well your own self!" he snapped pettishly. "What's the dope? What the devil is the matter with you? You're gettin' rottener every day. Think this act's booked solid for a year on big time? Think this act's going——"

"Listen, Joe," she said, playing nervously with her hands. "I—Joe, I can't go on. I can't. We're a frost. More so every day. I wish I'd never started out. I wish——"

But he choked her off, his own voice cold and hard, like a phonograph record.

"They's nothin' new in that idea. I wish the same thing. But—there's no point in crabbin'!" The bang of his shoe on the floor gave emphasis to his words. "Can't you lay off that stuff? . . . Can't you? All I get from you lately is 'I wish—I wish—I wish!' You make me sick!" He touched a match to a cigaret. "Shut the gate," he ordered, and she pulled shut the door. "Now! What's the matter?"

"I just can't go on; that's all. I feel dead—in here. When you got me to leave Scott's and come along with you I thought I could get away with it. I thought I could sing. And dance. But I'm rotten, as you say. I—Joe, will you give me fare to Chi? I'll do anything to get back! I—Joe, I hate this life. It's killing——"

"Will you clamp your jaw shut! Want everybody in the house knowin' your aches and pains? Them Grady sisters next door would like to hear you bawlin' me out, wouldn't they? Bet your life! And me only yesterday tellin' 'em we got alone magnificently. . . . You're sore because these hicks out front are stingy with their hands. Well, so am I. How'd I know this town was full o' hicks? When I grabbed that contract for this extra week here I was lookin' out for the coin; that's all. But this burg's full o' hicks. Hicks! That's what they are—hicks! When somebody like them Kelly Twins runs out and throws 'em three sinkers about a Ford and a mother-in-law they go nuts—completely nuts!"

As if to prove his postulate there came down to them then from out front, a great shout of laughter; the spontaneous sort of mirth that puts an act across. Savagely, Harris threw on his coat.

"That," he sneered, "is the Ham blackface tellin' 'em: 'That was no lady; that was mah wife.' Bah! And when we get out there and show 'em something classy in the latest dances and songs what do they do? I ask you, Myrt, what do they do? Why, the damn farmers sit there and wonder if it'll rain before they can comb the hay out o' their whiskers. The fish!"

"Will you give me fare to Chi, Joe? Will you?"

"Haven't got it."

"You never give me any money of my own—just expenses. I'm entitled——"

"D' you think this act's a gold mine?"

"Well—I will get back; back to Chicago. I'm through with this act, beginning now!" She rose and turned to go, but his fingers sought her arm, sinking into the flesh. She pulled away.

"Let me go!"

"Listen, Myrt," he whined. "Don't get sore, now. I—maybe I was hot. But the manager canceled us this morning. The hick! I wasn't goin' to tell you yet, but I got a scheme. It's good for five thou'. Get that? Five thou' cash. And we split it—fifty-fifty. All we got to do is——"

"Murder some one, I suppose. I don't take any stock in your scheme, Joe Harris. You told me I'd make Broadway in a year. And where's this scheme got me? St. Paul!" Her lip curled. "Count me out!"

"But——"

"I'm going home."

"But how you gettin' home? Riding the rails? Listen, honey, this job's good for twenty-five hundred to you. Think of what that'll buy you. You can go home on that. And it's not against the law, either. It's straight!"

Home! The jostle of Madison and State! The sting of the lake blasts in winter! The blare of park bands in summer! . . . Home!

She wavered an instant—then:

"Wha—what is it you want me to do?"

Harris dry washed his hands, asking her to sit down. He drew a chair up close to hers.

"Listen," he said. "It's easy, this job. All you got to do is scrape an acquaintance with a fellow. A westerner. Name's Cameron. That's all. I do the work. Your end will be twenty-five hundred, cash."

"What's your end?" I don't feel anxious about looking a jury in the face. I——"

"It's business politics, that's all. It's nothing that'll queer you with the law. I met a fellow the other day who's here buyin' horses for some European gover'ment what's in the war—France, I guess. Anyway, what the idea is is this: I got wind from the hotel clerk where there's a few hundred head of fine horses down at the yards across the river, waiting to be sold. Cameron's the name of the fellow who owns them. He's tryin' to sell this Frenchy the horses. See the line? He's after the sale; I'm after it. If I grab the contract I can clean up—right! If he gets it, I lose, and—you don't get to Chi!"

She reflected, not understanding what it was all about. Of course, his explanation was all right. Nothing materially wrong with the thing as he presented it. But—she looked at him, keenly. One never knew what might be back of Harris' innocence. It might mean—anything.

"Well, Myrt?"

"But I don't understand, exactly. Where do I come in?"

"You get this Cameron, that's all. He'll fall for you, easy. The Frenchy is receiving bids at 10 o'clock tomorrow night. Cameron and I are the only birds wise to the thing, see? If he ain't there I win. Easy. All you gotta do is take him to a show or some place. I ain't particular what you do with him. You can—well, I dunno." He lit another of his inevitable cigarets.

"Joe Harris! If you think——"

"Now, now," he soothed. "Keep cool. I didn't mean anything. That's all right! . . . I got it! Listen! I can meet him better than you—if you look at it that way. I can meet him at the bar, or some place. Leave that to me. I'll take him to dinner at the Parham house. You drift along and I'll introduce you to him. You sit down with us. I'll get up and breeze out for a minute. When I get back it'll be all over. See? And then"—he blew a triumphant smoke ring—"it'll be Waikiki for mine where the soft winds blow!"

"That's all, Joe? You're not lying to me?"

He laughed, rather too loudly, she thought. But he finally succeeded in convincing her. She wasn't, you see, very well acquainted with modern business methods. So, agreeing to help him, she left him there, smoking cigarets.

When she reached the street the chill of evening was in the air. She shivered slightly; walked faster. She had no overcoat. Overcoat money had gone into new costumes. But with all the money she would get—then there could be clothes. Lots of them. And Chicago. She smiled at the thought. It would be good to get back.

She paused at a corner news stand to buy a Chicago paper. The man at the stand glanced after her with an inquiring eye—she was pretty.

She walked faster, her paper, folded, under her arm, finally turning into River street. They—Harris and she—were stopping at an 'nth class hotel there. The Parham house was too expensive.

River street is of the west. There pawn shops hug saloons. Fruit stands edge fourth rate clothing stores. There are many things on River street. It is perhaps, in miniature, West Madison street—the Bowery. And across the dirty river lie the pens that house the western stock; sheep for Chicago; cattle for whoever cares to buy; horses for the fields of France.

Myrtle walked on. As she approached the fruit stand below her hotel she saw standing beside it a tall and tanned young fellow, munching solemnly at an apple. His clothes were of the west; sheepskin coat; overalls, stained considerably, stuffed into cowhide boots; broad brimmed Stetson. She noticed these things because, as she passed, he smiled. There could no gainsaying that; he had smiled, and at her. Startled, indescribably, she checked herself the barest trifle. His smile was—well, it was a good deal different. Flushing, she went on into the hotel. Not until she was in her room did she miss the paper that had been underneath her arm.

It soon came back to her, however. Came back in the company of the young westerner whose smile had been so disconcerting.

"They told me I'd find you here," he said as she opened her door. "I reckon this paper belongs to you. Dropped it when you came in. Paper isn't expensive, much; but sometimes it's darn important."

"Thank you," Myrtle told him, taking the roll. "It is important." Then she waited.

"O, that's all right!" he said, smiling. Indecision marked his next few movements. He twisted the brim of his hat; seemed undecided as to what was proper procedure in like circumstances. Then, suddenly: "Say, didn't you——" He stopped, confused.

"Yes?" prompted Myrtle. "Didn't I—what?"

"O nothing, I reckon," burst out this strange young man. Then, very red beneath his tan, he left her.

"H'm!" she reflected later. "He didn't say 'ain't' once. H'm!" And thereafter forgot him.

II.

Beneath Schnars-Alquist's painting of a rolling sea, at one of the tables next the wall of the Parham house barroom, Joe Harris and another man sat and toyed with their drinks. The larger man, name Miller (it had been Müller once) wrapped stubby fingers about the stem supporting his cocktail in a hold that seemed as if it must splinter the glass. The long, nervous fingers of Harris played with the drink that fronted him.

The Harrises of the world are legion; pasty of complexion; ultra-nervous; inclined toward too many cigarets and cocktails. Miller was more interesting. Even in the Wilhelmstrasse (he was number 180 there), where he had accomplished much, his face had drawn attention. It was of a grayish pink, that face; of an indescribable consistency, and so set and immovable that it might have been stamped there with a steel die. Eyes small, like a rodent's, were couched in puffy underlids. His hair was light and stiff, and so closely was it cropped that the dirty pink of the scalp showed underneath. He brushed it straight back from his low forehead, so that were porcupine's quills yellow it would have resembled them. And on his upper lip was a spot more pink and less rough than other portions of his face, indicating to the observing that Mr. Miller, perhaps when Müller, had worn a mustache. Thus Miller, late of Wilhelmstrasse, now of St. Paul.

Harris, his drink gone, lighted a cigaret. Miller ordered beer.

"You got her all right, eh, Harris?" asked Miller. His voice was thickish, suggestive of a fog. Harris leaned across the table, the excitement of too much drink rimmed in his eyes.

"I'll say I did! I made her come through. But listen: Now I'm pullin' off this little trick for you. Then what? How do I know you'll come across? Miller, I want my money now."

The German's lips twisted into a slight sneer.

"My word is enough," he said. "The money you will have—after."

"Well, your word ain't enough with me," Harris insisted. He leaned across the board and tapped the other's arm. "Believe me, Miller, I ain't takin' the word of any German. Now wait! Don't get excited. I ain't quarrelin' with you. You and me's in business together. But after what some of these countrymen of yours 've been pullin' off around the world lately—well, I get mine first."

Miller muttered angrily. Harris insisted. And finally Miller agreed. He would have the money for Harris in the morning. And so it was settled. They rose.

"Now to the rooms?" asked the German.

"Yes."

"Then I'll come along. I got the thing in my pocket. Also the stuff to use inside. This place here is too full of people whose business it is to overhear other people's business."

"Suits me, Bismarck," laughed Harris. "Are you the careful boy?"

"So? To be too careful is unknown," his companion said. "Otherwise——" His gesture was comprehensive.

In the security of the hotel room the German seated himself and pulled from an inside pocket a leather case. He opened it, and taking from its rest a large sized hypodermic needle, fitted the two parts together, then passed the thing to Harris.

"Here is the stuff to use," explained Miller, and gave over a bottle of darkish liquid. "You pull the thing up—like this—and then press."

Harris nodded understanding.

"What's that!" cried Harris, his nerves unsteady. From the hall had come a voice, then a knock upon the door. Quickly he shoved the implements under a newspaper that rested on the table. He flung open the door. Myrtle stood outside.

"H'lo, honey," said Harris, vastly relieved. "Meet Mr. Miller." Myrtle shook hands with the German. "This is the gentleman I was tellin' you about—the horses, you know. He's buying horses for—where was it, Miller?"

"Horses for France," answered the German, stolidly. "Horses are pretty scarce yet over there."

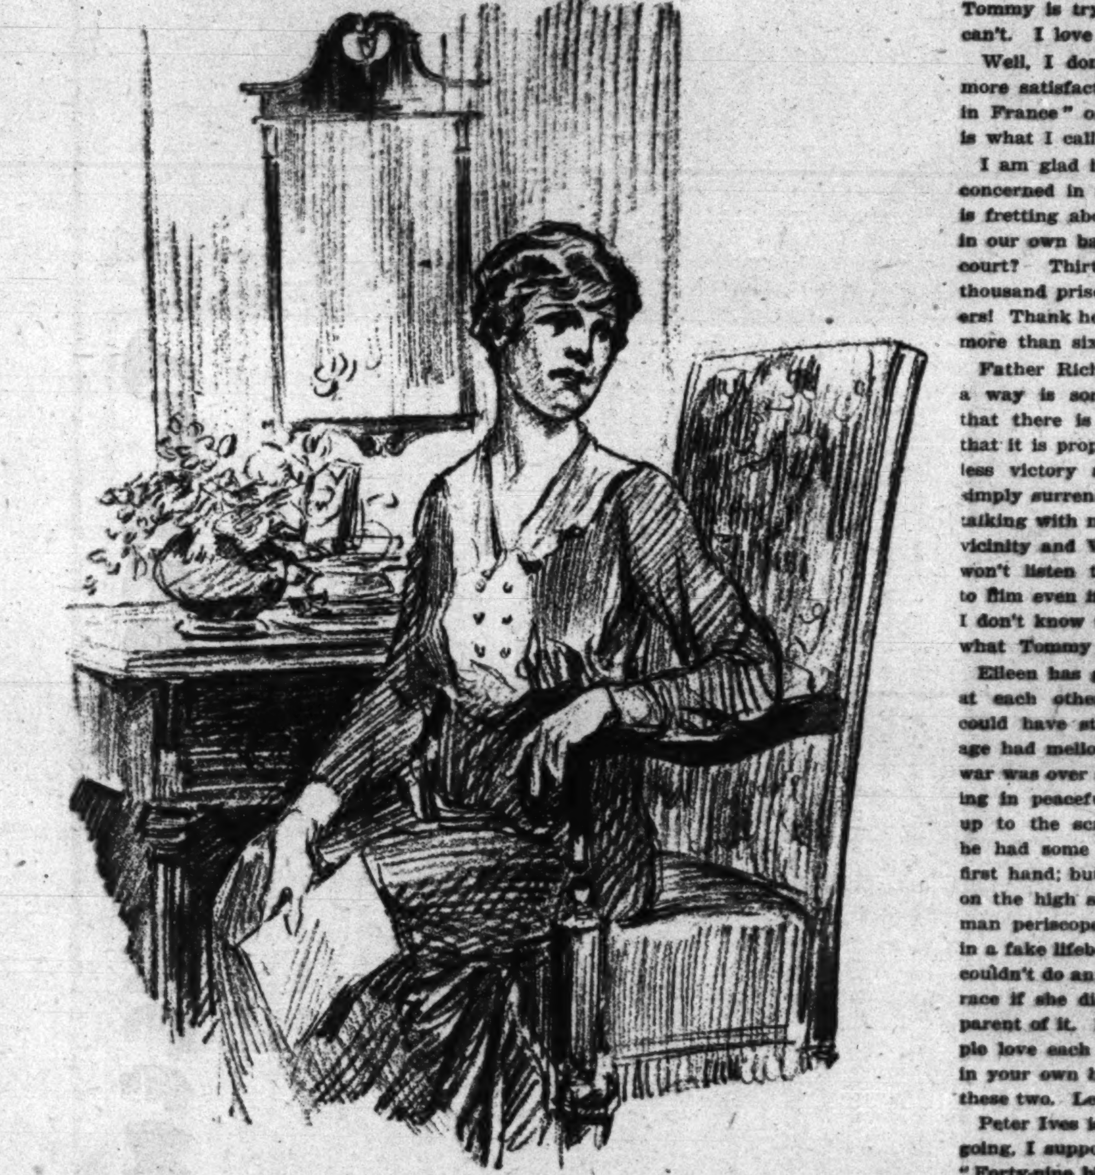
Myrtle looked at him. Somehow he didn't little tablecloth hemmed by me, with a deft meal originated by me set before us, with nobody else anywhere around and our own housekeeping arrangements than which nothing could be more ornamental, spread all around us—high chair and all?

Roses clambering all over our roof, and high set leaded windows with little white curtains blown lightly by the wind, and a slight litter of me and Tommy and our respective dogs and golf sticks and—and Obadiahs spread all over the place. This is certainly a very logical want. It sounds rather messy, but it wouldn't be. I am a very neat housekeeper, but not a fidget. I could make Tommy love it so.

More letters from Tommy. Telling me about a great many things that I don't know anything about, but ought to. He's beginning to talk French as a part of the day's work. "Jusqu'au bout," he says at intervals. "Jusqu'au bout." To the end, that means. To the end—what end? O! my God—can't that end come pretty soon? I don't mean to swear, but there isn't any other way to say some things. "Coûte que coûte." Cost what it may.



"Mother refuses to face the music, not exactly refuses, but she's constitutionally incapable of looking a personal fact in the face."

"We're beginning to think, now that we are actually on the spot," Tommy says, "that it's up to the people who are not in uniform to win this war. There's something that's got to beat Prussian concentration at its own game, on its own level. Spirit—that's what it's got to be. Unfailing, unflagging, untiring inspiration behind the endeavor. Every man, every woman of the allied nations has got to put himself or herself into the effort. We've got to believe in our war every waking and sleeping minute. Then God will back us up. It's God and the devil waging war. That's what it is."

Tommy, Tommy, Tommy, I'm trying to keep my end up. I'm not so whole-souled about it as you are, but I'll try.

"We're in billets now, and consistently busy. France certainly has been battered up a good deal. It would break your heart, and still it isn't quite as excruciating as you imagine it is going to be. There's something encouraging even about a hole in the earth that is healing itself over, and these devastated towns and broken people are now in the charge of those whose sacred trust it is to set the world going again, and make it right as nearly as possible. Those who are gone are out of it. Those who survive have seen and known what they have, and yet have the triumph of survival. C'est la guerre.—Dear, it isn't all wrong, nor it isn't all right, but it isn't all—bad. Whatever you and I think about the war, we think this.

"You're first, though."

He puts that in his letters at intervals in memory of that midnight discussion we had. He knows what I want, and he says it.

"Sometimes, in fact, most all of the time, I think it was sheer madness for me to have accepted a captaincy. It would have been better and wiser for me to have taken a lieutenancy, but it is too late now. A captain can't make mistakes and get away with them. I am beginning to realize the long list of mistakes there are and to quaver. Not really. I'm your Tommy that you put the heart into, and it's there, dear; it's there where you put it.

"I don't want to write too many descriptions of things for fear you will be painfully visualizing the place I described in my letter before last, while I am in still quite another Somewhere in France, and loving you better than I did the time before, at which you are still sticking. It grows on me like anything, you know, all the time, especially when sleeping and dreaming. That we are together in our dreams goes without saying.

"Still here's where I burst into literature. We're near a town, just on the edge of it, quite a way back from the lines, but en route. It is all very, very dirty—muddy, that is. I thought Plattsburg was muddy, but I didn't know the meaning of the word at that time. The town itself is very—chatty. The little shops are full of women with their tongues hung in the middle who start them going and then run about and leave them. They talk French suspiciously tinged with [line deleted by the censor], also the most amazing English and the most extraordinary mixtures, as if they were trying to adapt a guttural unmusical French to the whole foreign legion at once. Chocolate costs about 3 francs a pound, and eating apples 2 francs a pound. These people of course have the Scotch skun a mile for what we will, courteously, term thrift.

"The road leading north is the interesting thing. The lorries, guns, and horse trains go by continually, also an occasional two wheeled carrère drawn by a mule, and the poor foot slogging fellows bound forward to the lowest circle of mud. It's somehow very fascinating to watch that highway.

"It rains conscientiously every day at about 4 o'clock, and if the shower is a little late it makes up for it in pattering more smartly. This morning a battleplane flew over our billet—not before we had had breakfast—alas! it is never before breakfast here. After you've opened one eye in the black dark you do your chores and gobble your food with no interim—but somewhere along at about a normal breakfast time. In the distance I saw a lot of other—mosquitoes, that's all they look like, you know. They came nearer and there were bursts of smoke and one dropped—an enemy, I suppose. It was like watching a battle among educated fleas, they looked so little. See how hard your Tommy is trying to tell what he sees, and can't. I love you."

Well, I don't suppose any one ever got more satisfactory letters from "Somewhere in France" or so full of local color, which is what I call the "I love you" parts.

I am glad he isn't in Italy or in anyway concerned in that Italian offensive. Father is fretting about it as if it were happening in our own back yard, or should I say tiled court? Thirty thousand prisoners—sixty thousand prisoners, eighty thousand prisoners! Thank heaven you can't really visualize more than six individuals at once!

Father Richardson has a theory that in a way is sort of comforting. He thinks that there is treason in the Italian lines, that it is propaganda that has won a bloodless victory and that those Italians have simply surrendered with a wink. He's been talking with men just back from the Italian vicinity and Washington. Father of course won't listen to that. All men are heroes to him even if they are dagoes. Personally I don't know what to think. I would think what Tommy thought if he were here.

Eileen has gone. I flung her and Lester at each other's heads to no avail. She could have stood him after a while when age had mellowed them both and the cruel war was over and done with, and requiescating in peacefulness. He would have come up to the scratch even about the war if he had some woman to encourage him at first hand; but it wasn't to be. She is now on the high seas at the mercy of any German periscope that comes along, concealed in a fake lifeboat or not. I told her that she couldn't do anything toward propagating the race if she didn't try to love a prospective parent of it. I suppose you can't make people love each other by just working it out in your own head, but I wish I could make these two. Lester is a living reproach to me.

Peter Ives is taking up aviation. He'll be going, I suppose.

"Forty-nine blue bottles were hanging on a wall,
Forty-nine blue bottles were hanging on a wall,
And one blue bottle fell down from the wall,
And forty-eight blue bottles were hanging on a wall."

Soon Obadiah and I will be the only ones left.

. . . .

Women have got the vote, if you please. It was a complete surprise to me. Of course, I am a most ardent suffragist, but I rather dread exercising my prerogatives at the polls, without Tommy here to tell me what they are. However, he'll certainly be home before another November and by that time we'll be wearing our laurels as if they were old hair ribbons. Mother is tremendously pleased. She has certainly worked hard to cause this effect.

"Congratulations, mother," I said.

"Now, we've got to fight Washington," she said wearily. Sometimes I think that women overreach themselves by this attitude of grabbing everything in sight and then trying to get more in addition, especially at a time like this, but mother says that it's all very necessary. Well, she ought to know. She has been one longer than I have.

Tammany is in. I don't care so much. There must be some good in Tammany hall, though every one but Father Richardson says it is unspeakable—but Tommy would grieve. He was so proud of New York after it got cleaned up politically. I was getting to the point of passing the time of day pleasantly with the policemen myself. I shan't take it for granted that they are worthy of these amenities under the new régime.

We are getting right down to brass tacks in other ways. It takes 3 cents to send a letter. We are a good deal more stringently meatless and wheatless than we were, and quite painfully sugarless. We are going to be coalless—more involuntarily so, and Broadway is going to be lightless. Gosh! I feel as if we were moving right up to the lines. It's sort of dreary. I hate semi-demi states of anything. I'd rather have New York candlelit entirely, than suddenly to emerge on Broadway and find it unexpectedly dark where formerly there have been fizzy-water signs and butterflies, and soldier men saluting.

I hate to be surprised by the absence of accustomed brilliance. That's not patriotic, but it's very hard to be suddenly dutifully reconciled to something entirely foreign to your taste, especially if it has been sprung on you without warning. Sometimes when we've had vegetable meat loaf on a Tuesday when I hadn't remembered our weekly meatlessness, I've almost howled with vexatious disappointment, and yet I wouldn't have eaten a chop for a king's ransom. Human beings are certainly very inconsistent objects—but they're awfully human all the time.

Well, my life is more of a problem than I ever expected any life of mine to be. Father is losing all his money and will soon be businessless. Mother refuses to face the music, not exactly refuses, but she's constitutionally incapable of looking a personal fact in the face. Father refuses to apply for help to Aunt Evelyn—Roland's mother, and there is nobody else. C'es la guerre, as Tommy says. I don't know what we are going to do. I should normally have gone out to get a job at this juncture. I could almost live on what Tommy sends, but I gave that to his mother and father. Mother's idea is that I ought to have married Lester. Father's idea is that he ought to jump into the river. My idea is that the Lord will provide, and if at first you don't succeed in getting Him to, try, try again at some other angle. Hard times, Obadiah!

Being without Tommy, however, is my real problem. How to go on standing it. "I need thee every hour," is my perpetual song. Tommy is literally my other half, and how can a half a thing live and go-on living when it's severed from itself? I asked Doctor Fitch if he could give me something to help me keep up this endurance test, and he said, "No," that life consisted of bearing more than you could all the time, and getting a great deal out of it.

"You don't think I've reached my limit, then, doctor?" I said.

"You never will, dear," he said. "You are made of the stuff that endures beyond endurance."

"Do you think that's comforting?" I asked.

"You are not the kind of woman one tries to comfort," he said, "with anything but the truth."

"You don't know how I want my husband," I said. "I don't want to do myself any harm with it."

"Cry a little," he said, holding out his arms.

"No," I said.

"Why not?"

"I might cry too hard."

His own eyes filled with tears. He is very sweet to me, but apparently he doesn't know. No one does. Tommy!

I did, however, arrange with him not to pay him any money for his services. That's a great load from my mind. The nurses and things can be managed somehow.

"Will you do this for the war?" I said. "When the war is over I or my husband will pay you. Just at present we can't pay anybody anything."

"My dear," he said. Oh! he is sweet.

More letters from Tommy. He is moving up to the front, and I with him. He has been very lucky with his little experience to get into the thick of things at once. Lucky! Yes, I believe that. I know I've got to get this thing through my head once for all. It is a good thing to have my Tommy fighting over there. I sent him—begrudgingly, but I sent him. I endure his being there for his sake and for the sake of ideas and feelings I hardly understand. I keep telling myself that I have done more than enough—more than I can endure. In my soul I have not let him go yet. I know that now, but it must be done.

The TEENIE WEENIES HAVE A TROUBLESOME DAY.

by WM. DONAHEY.

IN spite of the bad roads the Teenie Weenies had to travel the little folks sang many songs as they moved along. They were on their way to spend several weeks camping in the big woods and every Teenie Weenie was as happy as he could be. The first night they camped only a short distance from the shoe house, for the roads had been bad and they could make but little headway.

The next morning things seemed to go wrong as soon as the little folks were out of bed. First, a pinching bug ran away with a loaf of bread and when the Cook threw a stick at it he upset a thimble of coffee and put out the camp fire. Next, one of the mice, which pulled one of the tiny wagons, was taken sick and the Doctor had to give him a dose of castor oil, so it was quite late before the little people were on their way again.

They had been moving along the road only a short time when the wagon which the Clown drove ran over a peach seed and broke one of the wheels.

"This is hard luck," said the General as he viewed the wrecked wheel. "There's nothing to be done but leave several of you fellows to mend it while the rest of us go on ahead and get a camping place ready for the night."

The Doctor and the Chinaman were ordered to remain with the Clown and repair the wheel, while the rest of the Teenie Weenies moved on to the next camp. As it was then near lunch time the Cook left enough food for the three Teenie Weenies and the kind hearted Lady of Fashion agreed to remain and prepare it for them. At noon time the three Teenie Weenies sat down to their lunch, which the Lady of Fashion had set out daintily on a big clean leaf.

It took most of the afternoon to fix the wheel, but it was not a hard job, as the wagon was shaded from the hot sun by a big dock leaf. When the work was done the Lady of Fashion took her place beside and driver and once more they moved along, followed by the Chinaman and the Doctor.

They had gone only a short distance when the horses began to appear nervous. They were just coming around the side of a hill at the time and suddenly the horses leaped into the air and plunged down the hill at great speed.

"Steady there, boys, steady now!" yelled the Clown and he pulled on the lines with all his strength, but the horses paid no attention to his words and plunged on straight for a hole near the roots of a big tree.

"Crawl out through the wagon and jump!" shouted the Clown to the little lady at his side. The Lady of Fashion scrambled over the corn, beans, and other things in the wagon and leaped to the ground just as the team dashed into the hole.

"What's the trouble? What happened?" asked the Lady of Fashion as the Doctor ran up and helped her from the ground.

"There's the trouble," cried the Doctor, pointing up the hill towards a big black cat which stood staring with big round eyes at the Teenie Weenies.

"I beg your pardon," said the cat, "I didn't mean to cause all this trouble. I just happened along, that's all," and he quickly disappeared over the hill.

The horses were so badly scared it took quite a long time before they could be coaxed out of the hole. Fortunately the Clown, the horses, and the wagon were not damaged by the hurried trip into the hole and after the things, which had fallen out, were gathered up the little folks set out for camp, where they arrived just at dark.

A FRENCH WAR POSTER

BY POULBOT

By ELEANOR JEWETT

WHEN the gray skies weep, and the long days drag, and the sun seems gone never to shine again with its old warmth, then down the street march the poilus of France, bandaged and limping, but smiling, while "to attention" spring the children on whose tender shoulders rests now the future of France.

It is the favorite game of the French children, this game of war. And they are becoming adepts in the art which once was practiced to perfection by the boche alone. Red Cross man, and standard bearer, and two brave soldiers of the line, we find in this remarkable piece of poster work by Poulbot. The bearded poilu smiles to himself as the swift little hands spring to position, and limps forward with his companion with never a turn of the head, or a movement to betray to the little army the warmth of the feeling that surges in his heart at sight of them.

Quite remarkably has the artist caught the expressions on the children's faces. The sober little girl biting her lip to repress the chuckle that might come, because of the joyous honor that is hers—to carry the flag; the wide eyed young sharpshooter fingering his musket bravely, and confident that the water bottle on his back is full, in case, O wonder of wonders! the soldiers might chance to be thirsty and ask him for a drink; the red capped private next, with his long sword, to manipulate which some skill is needed, you may be sure; and last the tiny Red Cross man with the symbol stuck in his gun. Gallant little soldiers! In your hands the honor of France is safe indeed!

Poulbot, the artist, is a famous French cartoonist. More recently he has become celebrated as a sympathetic interpreter of children—particularly the children of the war. His book, "Des Gosses," is a book to laugh over till the tears come and the merry merges into the tenderly pathetic, rarely the sad, for Poulbot has kept the courage of youth, and the eyes of youth to which no cloud of tragedy or disappointment is so dense that the sun of a happy tomorrow may not shine through.

This poster is used through the courtesy of Mrs. Russell Tyson of the American Fund for French Wounded.

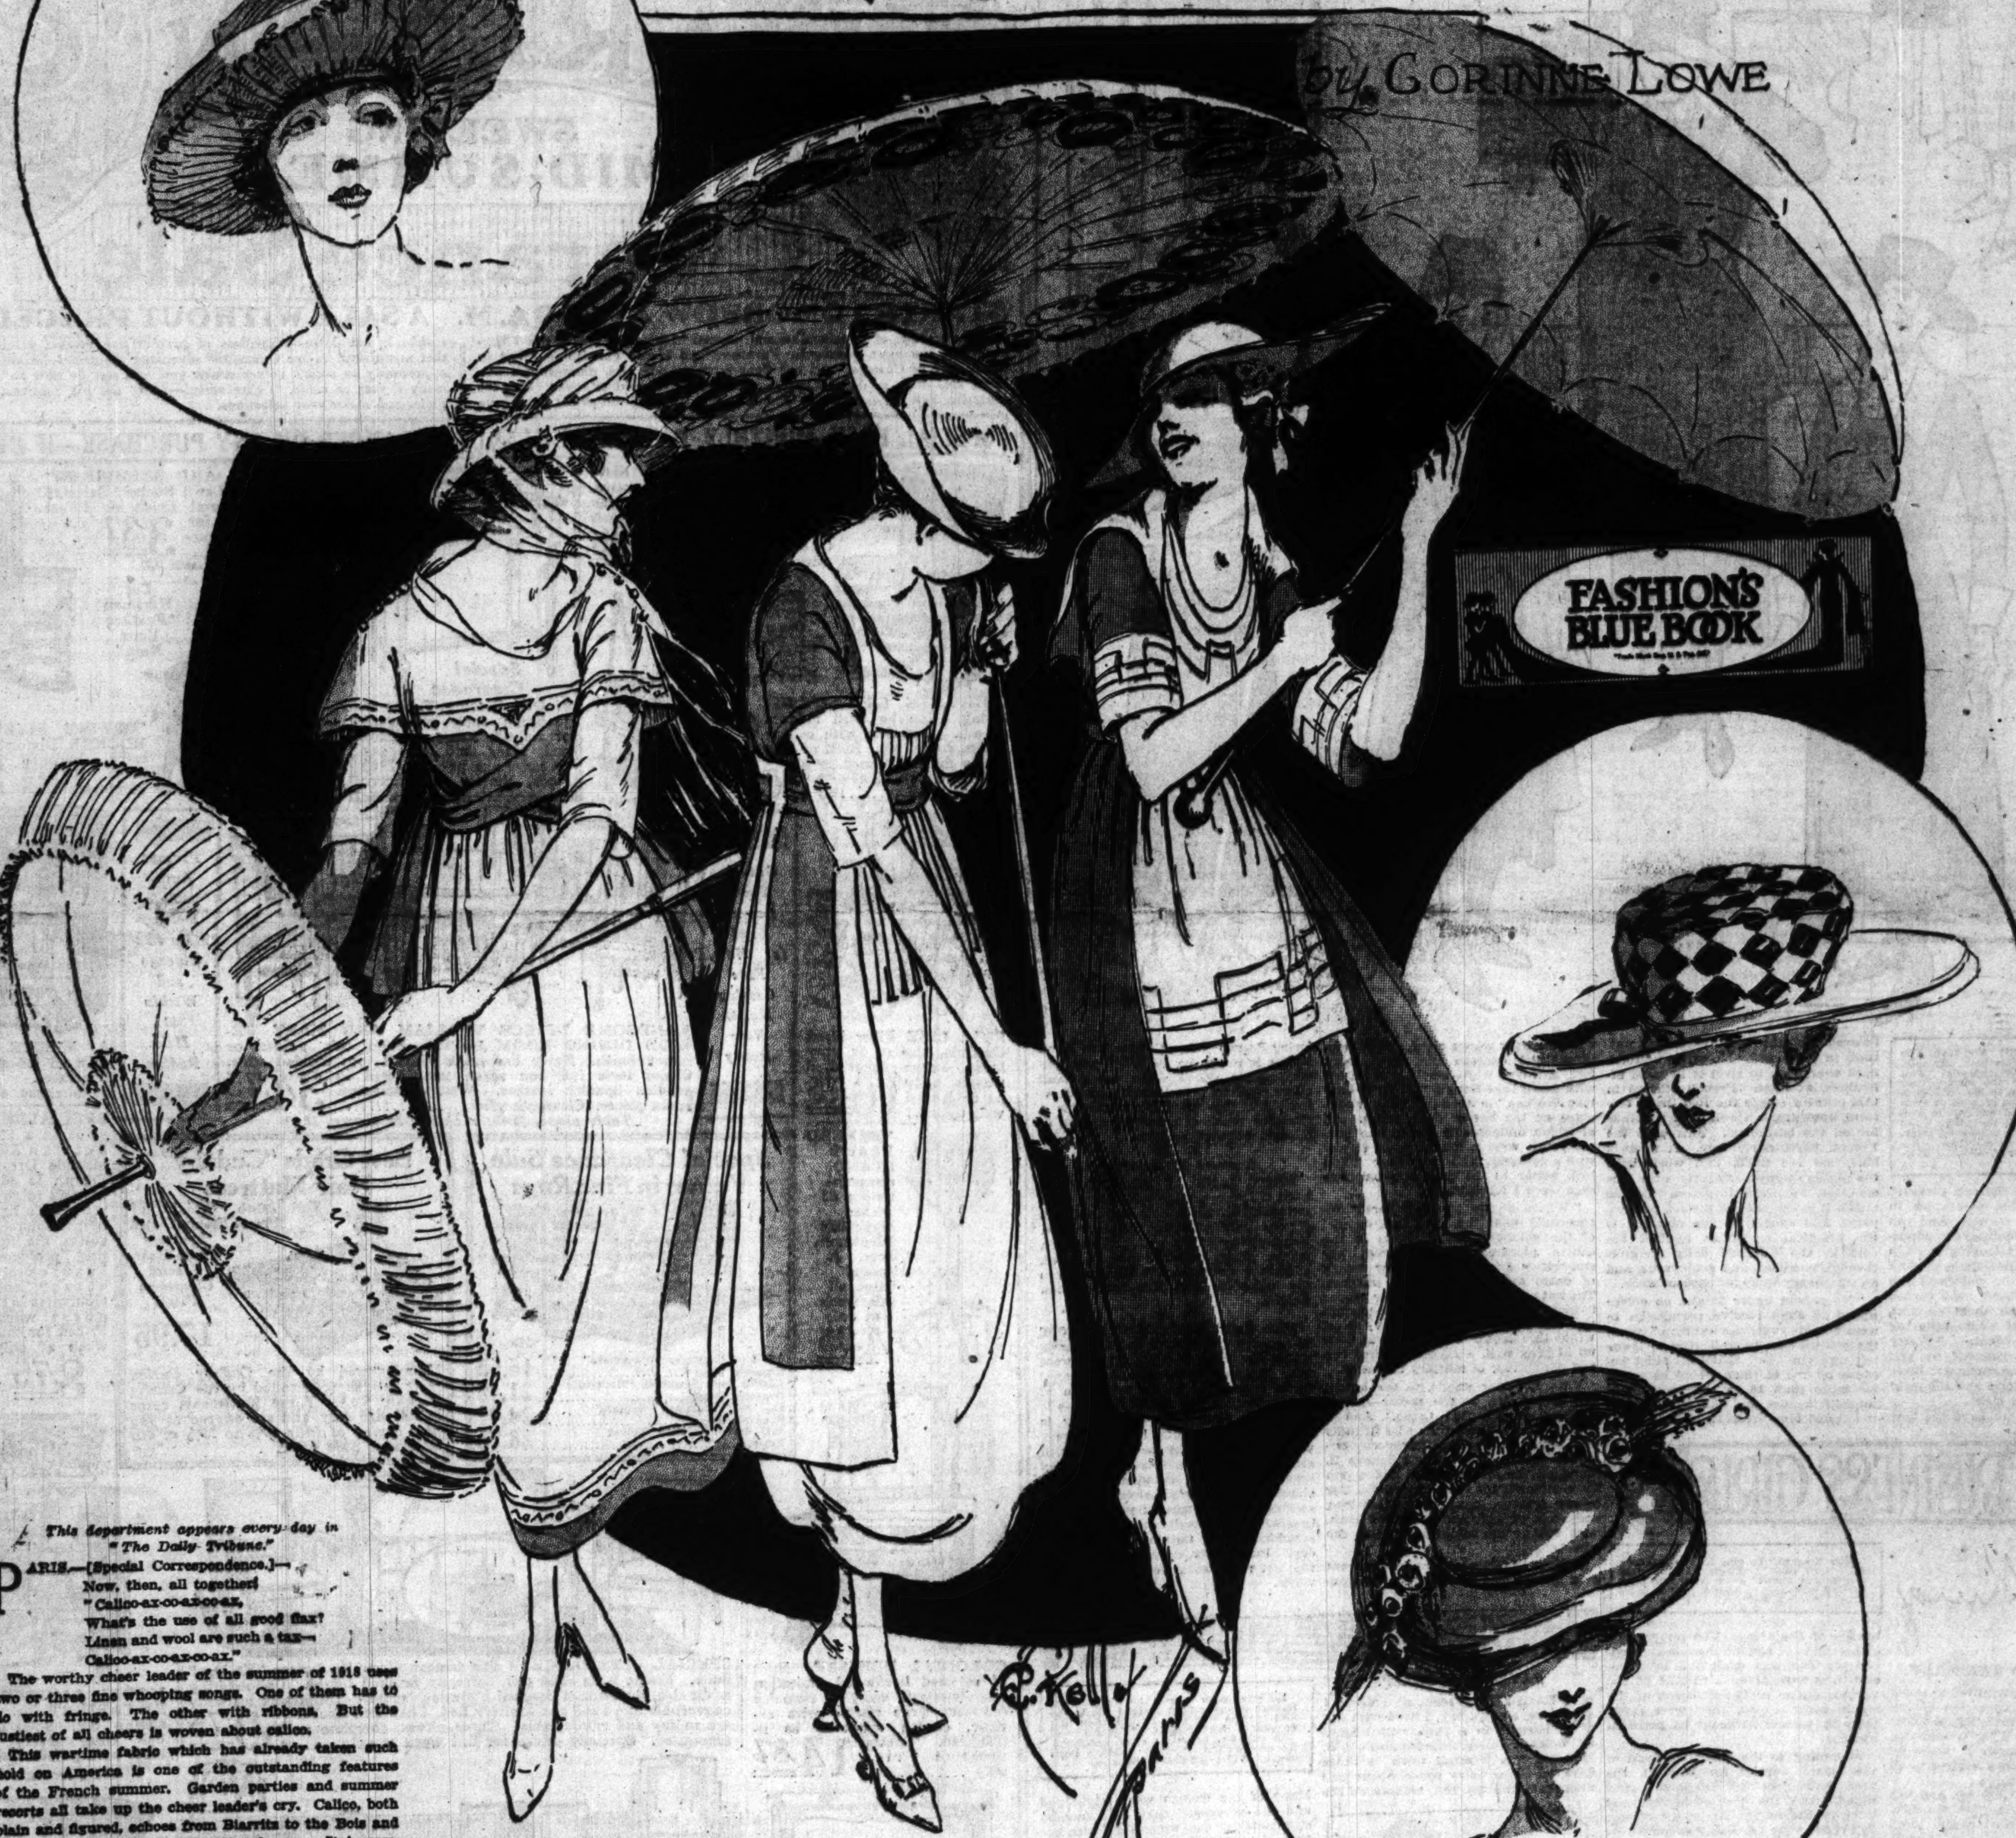
A Midsummer Day's Dream

by CORINNE LOWE



This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

PARIS.—[Special Correspondence.]—
Now, then, all together!
"Calico-ax-co-ax-co-ax,
What's the use of all good flax?
Linen and wool are such a tax—
Calico-ax-co-ax-co-ax."

The worthy cheer leader of the summer of 1918 uses two or three fine whooping songs. One of them has to do with fringe. The other with ribbons. But the lustiest of all cheers is woven about calico.

This wartime fabric which has already taken such hold on America is one of the outstanding features of the French summer. Garden parties and summer resorts all take up the cheer leader's cry. Calico, both plain and figured, echoes from Biarritz to the Bois and back again. It is used for entire dresses. It is combined effectively with batiste or organdy or pique. Elaborate designs in calico appear in waistcoats joined with serge or pique suits. And as to the calico hat—what was that Eugene Field said about the calico cat?—well, cat and hat seem to have now proportionate appetites!

Among the designs one notices some charming, quaint little bouquet effects such as might have come down to us from another war. The favorite at present, however, is not figured but plain calico. Either that or the background with indistinct dot or tiny figure is the type which one notes at the smartest affairs. And at the left we show one of these lovely frocks of plain calico—this in two shades of gray.

Twilights know what they are about when they wear rose and gray so constantly. No combination is more exquisite; and here the artful lady combines with her frock of gray calico which, by the way, is embroidered in rose cotton, a hat of pink tulle and a sunshade of sheer rose colored organdy.

The organdy sunshade! It is the favorite dress-accessory of the hour. Lovely things they are, too, these bits of fanciful organdy—a bit of cloud held on a stick! In the center of the page is a particularly effective one. Also of rose color, this is a Japanese design holding between the two thicknesses of the fabric flowers and leaves cut out of silk. As co-stars in this costume, are a hat of straw velour in rose shade and a frock of horizon blue calico trimmed with batiste of the same shade. The panels of this frock, it will be noted, are of batiste bordered with the calico.

There is a lyric touch about the Leghorn garden party hat trimmed with narrow blue grosgrain ribbon and a wreath of roses. Even the strongest minded of us can't quite resist Leghorning on occasions. Here, on the last figure, is found a charming edition of this bonnet carried out in gray straw with natural colored roses and blue ribbon. With it a combination of putty colored calico and the same shade of batiste. An interesting trimming is formed by the strips of calico arranged in geometric designs on the batiste waistcoat and cuffs and upper section of the skirt. These strips are, by the way, picot edged. The organdy parasol is lined with taffeta.

That organdy need not always be the fluffy, frilly thing is shown quite clearly by the tailored hat which appears in the upper circle at the right. A biscuit colored organdy brim is combined in this instance with a crown of woven black and gold straw—an extremely smart hat to wear with tussor or silk jersey suit. Right below it, a coquettish Watteau affair of flesh colored tulle which is stitched and trimmed with flowers of rose and silver gauze. At the upper left of the page is another chance to look as feminine as you are not in a hat of mauve organdy shirred upward from the face and trimmed with pink straw flowers.

In those old effete days gone by we used to say, "What kind of ribbon shall I use for my frock or hat?" Now all this is changed. We get some hundred yards of ribbon for a frock or some dozen for a hat and—wonder what we're going to trim the ribbon with. Ribbon millinery and ribbon frocks and ribbon waistcoats—all these are being exploited in Paris specialty shops and department stores. For instance, Lewis made for the famous Madame Spinelly a hat entirely of faille ribbon. As for the ribbon waistcoat, introduced this year by Bulloz—why, what can the old ribboned Maypole have to reproach us with today?

Some of these ribbon waistcoats are extremely chic and, although perhaps more universally taken up by young girls who do not represent the most exclusive note in fashion, they represent a real style tendency.

Some of these waistcoats are made of plain dark blue or sand colored faille ribbon diversified perhaps by a checkerboard design of contrasting color ribbon. Others—and these have a sprightly touch of the Louis Seize waistcoat—are of ribbons with small pompadour bouquets. For instance, a ribbon with a cream background set with tiny black stripes between which are scattered bouquets in blue green and pink—this made one of the smartest waistcoats seen in the Bois.

Indeed, so voraciously has the ribbon tooth taken hold, that a few blouses are showing ribbon tabliers. Thus at one of the specialty shops they were showing a few days ago a model where biscuit colored mousseline de soie sleeves, back and side sections exploited a tablier front of black and navy ribbon.

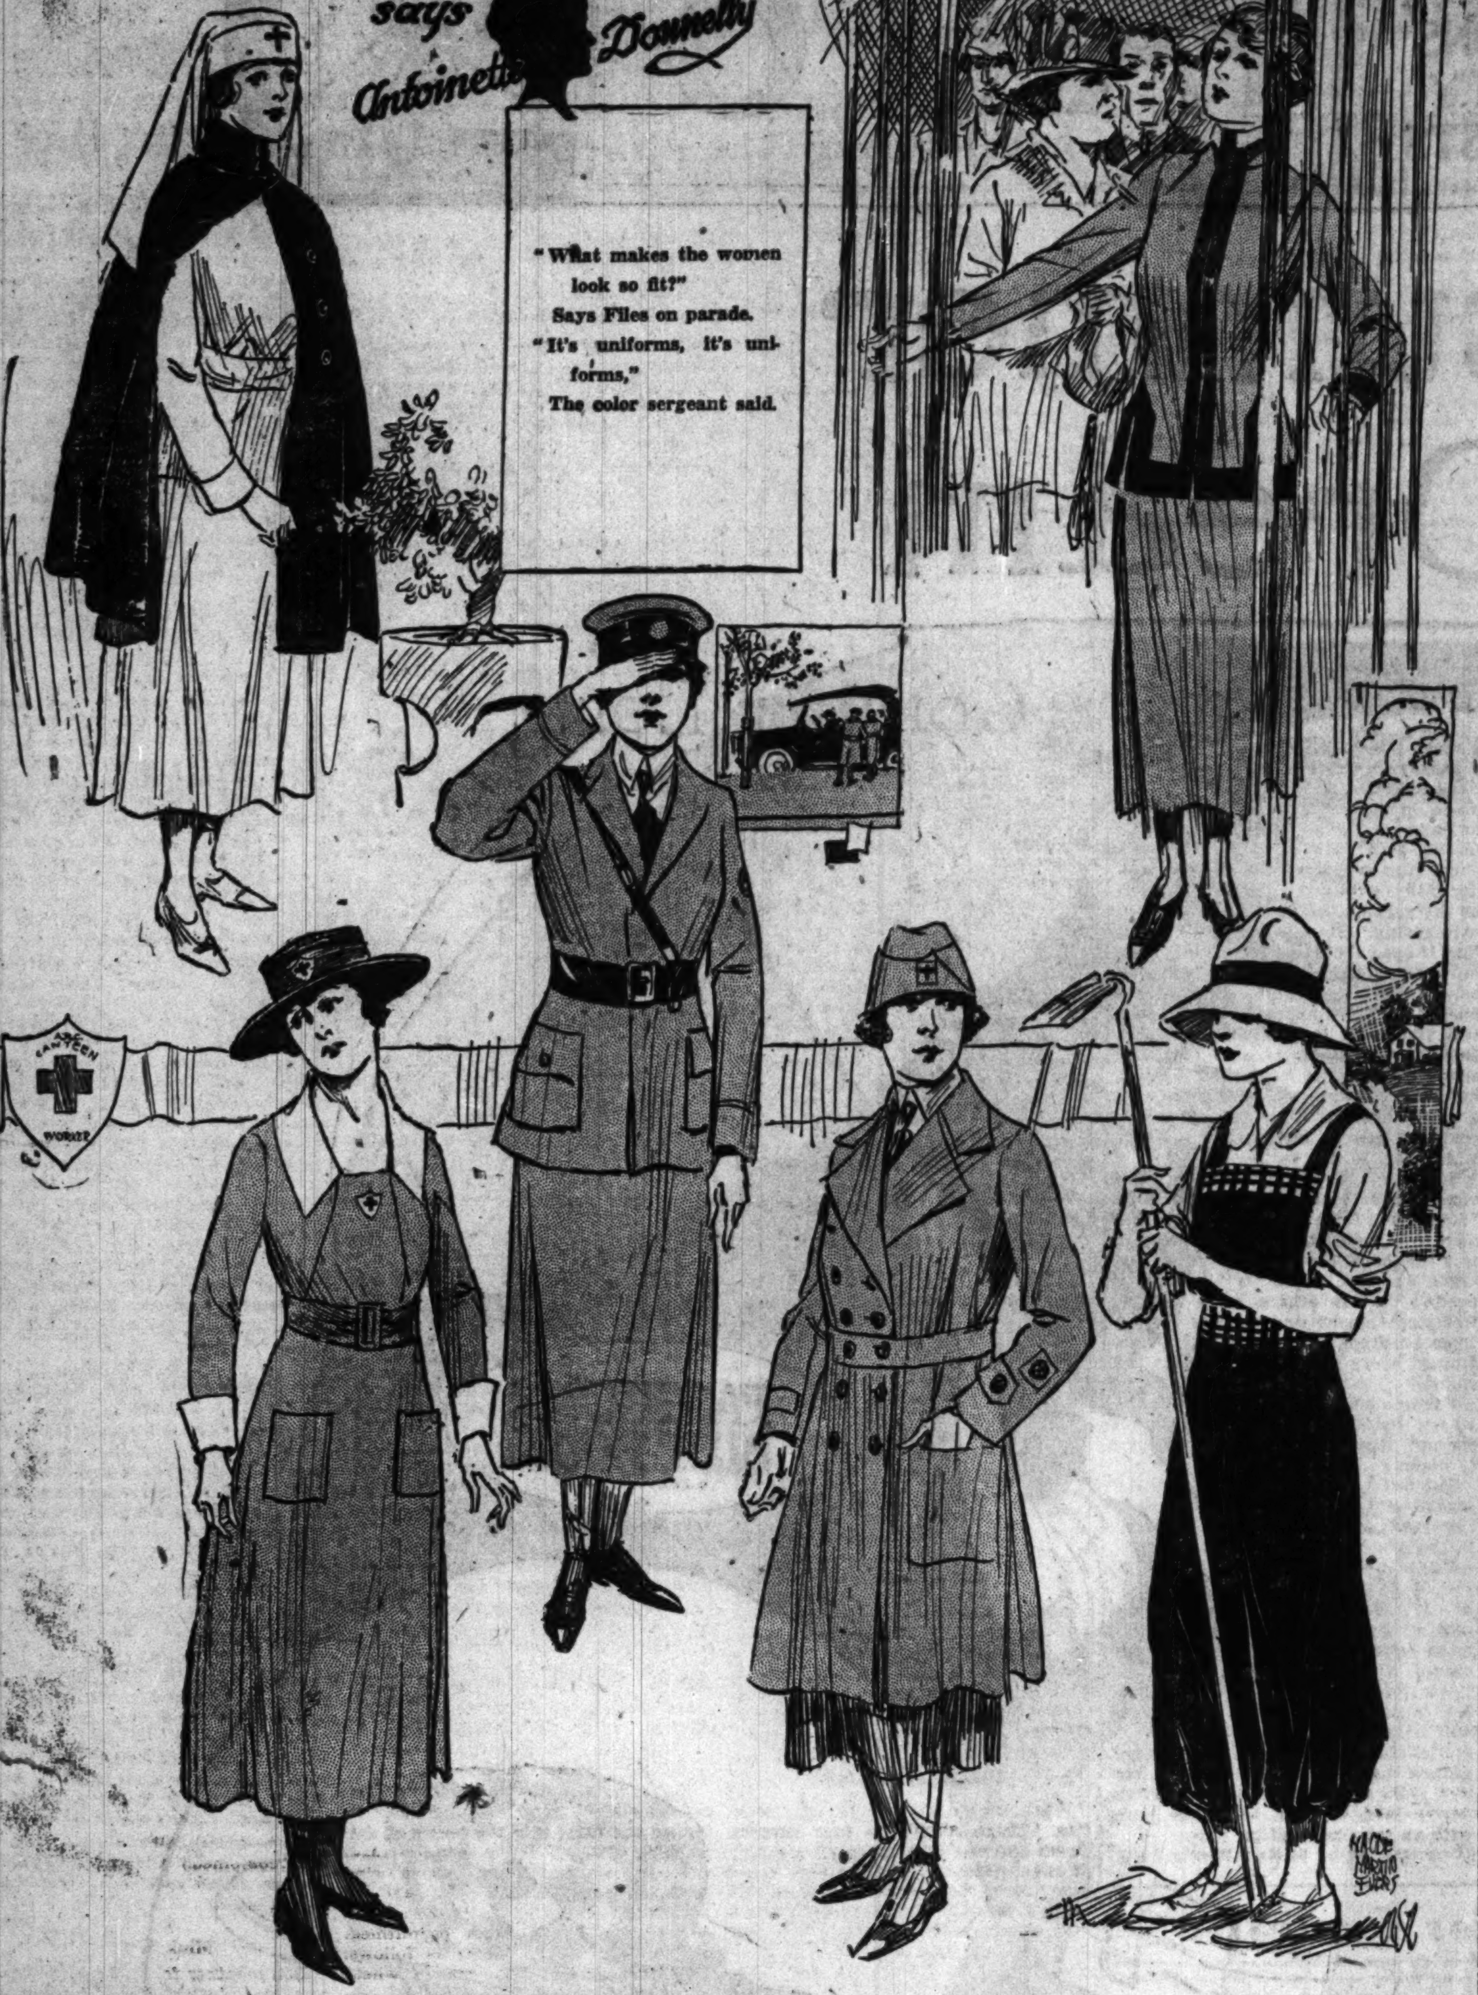
As to frocks, many of these are trimmed with bands and loops of contrasting ribbon. Thus, a basket weave woolen may be decked with trimming of black faille.

Fringe is also a feature of summer dressing which will probably emigrate to America in full force by next fall. Here in Paris fringe is as much a part of the costume as it used to be part of our old Pullman trains. Everybody and everything is fringed like the Spanish girl's frock. Beads, too, take up their part and often there is a combination of crystal or wooden beads with silk fringe.

Silk jersey suits are worn today by all classes and so too is the huge canotier or sailor which gives to women the look of so many peripatetic toadstools. Another favorite of the Paris summer is the frock of tussor. Natural colored tussor is extremely popular and some of the smartest models are trimmed with the ever present soutache.

UNIFORMS for WOMEN

says Antoinette Donnelly



"What makes the women look so fit?"
Says Files on parade.
"It's uniforms, it's uniforms,"
The color sergeant said.

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Or, what is your beauty ill? Write it in to me. I have a tonic, a diet, an exercise, or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, Chicago Tribune.

"STEP back in the car, please!" commands the new voice in the elevator corner. And you step back submissively, admiring betimes the natty looking maid in the corner from whence the command issues. Some have the collars of the smartly tailored looking coat turned down and others wear them up with a becoming touch of white relieving the male collar effect. "Pretty nifty," you say to yourself as you step off lively at your particular floor. So much for the uniform and the maid within it to the upper right.

To our upper left we have the best beloved and the most becoming uniform in the world. No other uniform need ever hope to rival it in male affections, at least. French officers in this country salute the Red Cross uniform, knowling full well what it stands for on the battlefield. This cape the French particularly love. It is dark blue and red lined, and worn with the lining thrown smartly over the shoulder, following tradition. To the public it is the cape of poems, posters, plays, and stories; to the nurse it is the practical protection against the cold in the hundred daily errands through corridors and courtyards, and an emergency wrap for outdoor wear.

"No person under 23 and no officer under 25 shall receive permission to wear a canteen service uniform," quoth the powers that be, referring to lower left uniform. But that's all right because no one of them would be taken for more than 16 in the becomingly youthful sailors and the white collar and cuffed blue dresses! It's all right with the boys whose comfort and happiness the canteen uniformed work for. A woven white shield, a red cross with small blue letters, "A. R. C. Canteen Worker," is worn in a conspicuous place on the hat or dress front. All of which undoubtedly forced one honest youth with a lonely heart to say with a genuine ring in his voice: "You look better to me than any one I've seen since I left home."

"Where do we go from here?" respectfully asks the good looking girl of the volunteer motor corps in the center picture, different from her emergency driver sister in few details of dress and still fewer of purpose. The hat of the emergency driver proper is more like the royal flying corps and the cap and the suit are navy blue, while this motor corps miss is done up in gray with a regular peaked cap and general air of military efficiency.

This, my dear pupils, to the left of the farmerette, is the motor service uniform of the Red Cross. And it proves that a woman may be fittingly and handsomely garbed under any circumstances! If you don't believe it, stand on the street corner and watch for a motor truck to roll by with a fair young creature done up in this long gray coat of whipcord or oxford cloth, with belt of the same material at the wheel.

With her eye peeled for a bean sprout or a lettuce leaf instead of for a wandering Romeo judge, this modern Maud Muller is not to be disturbed with uncomfortable skirts when the overall offers comfort, practicability, and serviceability, and an opportunity for a feminine touch of trimming on top of bib and belt and pockets!

Answers to Inquiries.

MARY JANE: I SHOULD TRY hard, if I were you, to cultivate a taste for milk, because it is an essential part of your diet if you want to gain weight. You should drink it with and between meals. If you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope, I shall mail you the complete diet list for gaining weight.

MRS. S. C.: THE COLOR CANNOT be restored to gray hair and I certainly would not think of dyeing it if I were you. Not only is the use of hair dyes to be deprecated as an exhibition of poor taste, but the use of hair dyes is extremely dangerous. Gray hair is really beautiful when it is of silvery whiteness. It must be treated with great care. It should never be wet except when it is shampooed and it should never be dried before a hot fire, as this tends to turn it yellow. It is best whenever possible to dry it in the sunshine or by fanning it or rub it dry. Put a few drops of bluing in the last rinse water to keep it silvery white.

For and By BUSINESS GIRLS

PHONE GIRLS IN THE ARMY.

FEW women are permitted to serve directly in the operation of the war, but it is gratifying to know that when a call for women for special active war service is issued by the war department they are recruited quickly and efficiently.

The signal corps called for, and has sent abroad, 100 trained women telephone operators who speak both French and English, to work in military telephone exchanges in bases of supplies and points of embarkation. The signal corps sent out this call at the request of Gen. Pershing, commander of the American expeditionary forces.

This group of 100 girls—the first girls to go to France as members of the American expeditionary forces—is composed for the most part of French girls who have come to America to live and of American girls who have lived in France. The unit was sent in three groups of about thirty each. The first and second groups were made up of girls who had experience as telephone operators, and the third group of girls who had been given intensive emergency training.

Early in January of this year the first group of girls entered the training schools to be trained in advanced telephony. They then practiced in the largest private branch exchange in New York, followed by three days' work in cantonment telephone exchanges, to acquire familiarity with military terms.

During the period of training military drill was given to these women every day, and lectures were delivered to them by officers of the signal corps on the duties and the traditions of that branch of the army. The importance of the lines of communication in modern warfare was explained to them, and they were given a résumé of the various duties of the divisions of the signal corps. Also, they were given talks by women surgeons on personal hygiene.

According to the official bulletin of the federal service for May 21, the first contingent of telephone girls sailed about the first of March, and later in the month American officers in France were agreeably surprised by hearing over the military telephones operators who used American terms, gave splendid service, and who could translate the message of a French officer to an American officer, or vice versa.

The second group sailed the middle of March, and the third during the latter part of April.

The members of the woman's telephone unit were required to pass strict health examinations, and were inoculated and vaccinated in the same manner as American soldiers. To the everlasting credit of womankind be it said that out of sixty girls who were inoculated not one fainted. An officer who has seen many soldiers go through the same ordeal said this was most unusual.

The American captain who recruited this unit says it would be impossible to brigade an American troop without these girls; and he assures us they are going to astound the people over there by the efficiency of their work. In Paris it takes from forty to sixty seconds to complete one telephone call, while our girls are equipped to handle 300 calls an hour.

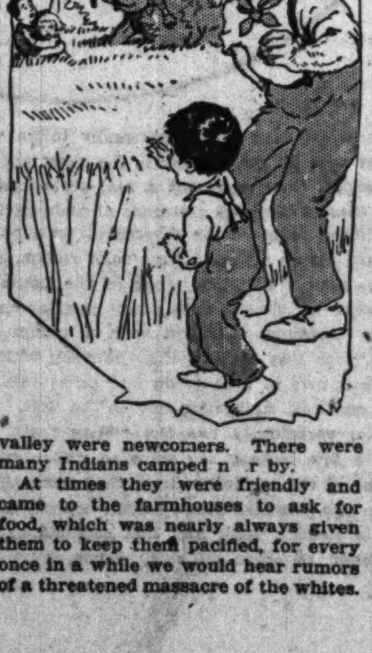
Every American woman may well be proud of this first feminine contingent to the American expeditionary forces.

REAL LOVE STORIES

SAVED HER SCALP.

Do you know a real love story—one that is stranger than fiction? It is the idea that is wanted. No attention will be paid to literary style. "The Tribune" will pay $5 for every story published. No manuscripts returned. Address Doris Blake, "The Tribune," Chicago.

NEARLY fifty years ago, when I was a small boy, I lived with my parents in a place called Lone Rock Valley, near Mauston, Wis. Mouston was a small town in those days, as the country round about was unbroken, and the few settlers in the valley were newcomers. There were many Indians camped near by.



At times they were friendly and came to the farmhouses to ask for food, which was nearly always given them to keep them pacified, for every once in a while we would hear rumors of a threatened massacre of the whites.

Many of the women were frightened and hid whenever they saw Indians approaching. One woman hid with her little girl of 5 in a wheat field when she learned that a number of drunken Indians were coming that way on their ponies.

My father and I were going home from our work crosslots when I espied this neighbor woman crouching in the wheat near a clump of bushes. I wouldn't have seen them, probably, but for the tow head of the child. I drew my father's attention to them and he went nearer to investigate, just as a naked Indian rose up from the other side of the bushes and aimed a tomahawk straight at the child's head.

Everybody went armed in those days on account of the Indians, and my father reached for an old revolver in his hip pocket. I must have realized that it would be too late, for I shouted at the savage to stop, at the top of my voice. Taken by surprise, he lowered the tomahawk, and seeing the revolver my father had leveled at him by this time, he turned and fled with a wild cry.

The little tow headed girl and I became the best of friends after that. And when we were old enough to wed I reminded her that she owed her life to me, for I had saved her scalp years before. We now have three tow headed grandchildren, of whom we are very proud.

English Recipe for Pork Pie.

"A long time ago some one asked for an English pork pie recipe. I have been a long time sending it, as I had to write to England for it. It is awfully good. I have used this recipe myself and found it quite satisfactory, but not easy. However, I trust that L. F. L. will be able to use it if she has not received one in the meantime:

"One pound of flour, one-half pound of lard or six ounces may be better to knead, three pounds of pork, or veal and ham if liked; allow one ounce of salt and one ounce of pepper. Rub into the flour a portion of the lard, the remainder put with sufficient milk and water to mix the crust (about a teacup of milk and water, I should think; it does not say); boil the milk and water and the remainder of lard gently together for ten minutes, then pour it boiling on the flour and knead and beat it till quite smooth. Now raise the crust in either a round or an oval shape, cut up the pork into pieces the size of a nut, season it in the above proportion, and press it compactly into the pie in alternate layers of fat and lean and pour in a small quantity of water, lay on the lid (which I presume one cuts out of the crust first, according to size of pie you are making), and cut the edges smoothly round and pinch them together; bake in a rather slow oven as the meat is solid. I should brown the crust first and then bake slowly in a soaking heat.

"I put warm water in the jar to keep it warm. Frequently the inexperienced cook finds much difficulty in raising the crust. She should bear in mind that it must not be allowed to get cold or it will fall immediately; to prevent this the operation should be performed as near the fire as possible. A glass bottle or jam jar may be placed in the middle of the paste and the crust molded on this, but be careful to keep it warm all the time. I should warm a jam jar if I were you, as I think it is difficult to raise the crust, and you naturally want it a good shape. By the way, I should try to get some pig meat (not pork like we roast)—I mean what we used to call spare ribs; faili this, I should get loin of pork. I thi in the first one I should only put ounces of lard as one-half pound w make the crust so short and it wou stand up. C. K."

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

POPULARITY OF CORNFLAKES.

PERHAPS one-tenth of the women in the United States have found the charming way to save wheat, to extend sugar, to save time and dirt, and to get at one and the same time a nutritive lump as well as a pleasing near confection to take the place of a sweet or a candy.

The commonest formula probably for cornflake cookies is: Four egg whites beaten stiff, one cup of sugar, four cups of cornflakes, and one cup of shredded cocoanut. Many people divide this formula by two, except for the cocoanut. Maple sugar, brown sugar, sirup, molasses, or a mixture of sweetenings is used to vary the cookie, and sometimes the amount of sugar is doubled or again only one-half of what probably appeared in the original formula.

When and where this original formula appeared I do not know. Possibly it was in some of the advertising literature of cornflake manufacturers.

Considering the facts in the case, it is no longer a mystery that cornflakes are not allowed as a substitute. The grocer says they are too popular. And undoubtedly they are, for there are cornflake puddings, cornflake waffles, cornflake creams, etc. Cornflakes are used in stuffings for fowl and peppers; in muffins or sprinkled over the top; in scallops of various sorts; in fudge and other sweets; in loaves to imitate meats, etc. They are used with meat, fruits, and vegetables, and it is not surprising that a great number of people have found that they could use cornflakes for pie crust, instead of the oatmeal sprinkled over a greased pie tin. They are sweeter and, of course, require far less cooking. And the cornflake cookie or macaroon mixture may be cooked in the larger round called a torte, then two of the large rounds filled with cooked cream, whipped cream, ice cream, or soft icings with fruit.

All this cornflake cookery is really a sort of play cookery, easy and without muss or the making of dirt. It is good, but in one sense it does not seem like serious cookery. Ground up popped corn may be used in nearly every one of the cornflake recipes, just as the cornflakes can be used in nearly every one of the oatmeal recipes.

There may be a lot to eat in a cornflake macaroon as far as calories are concerned, so that it may well take the place of candy on this score, and also because it may be made almost as gratifying to the taste as candy. And in spite of its simplicity, skill utilized in its manufacture does make a lot of difference in the results. It requires less skill to make a cornflake macaroon or kiss than to make one of almonds or cocoanut, but the more ingredients you push into the egg white, the harder it is to get an entirely palatable effect.

One of the ingredients that take this cornflake cookie out of the macaroon or kiss class is flour. Some cooks, to be economical, probably, add considerable flour, and others use equal quantities of oatflakes. Without doubt rice flour is the one that makes any of these small cookies most like a confection.

And, by the way, it has seemed a most remarkable thing to me that so many hundreds of people use graham and whole wheat flour and believe they are not using wheat. A cornflake mixture labeled "Liberty cookies" had the subtitle "without sugar, wheat, or fat." Yet it contained graham flour and had both walnut and cocoanut. Fresh shredded cocoanut contains over 50 per cent fat and prepared cocoanut 57 per cent, while walnuts may contain over 60 per cent of fats.

Many people make the most confident statements of this sort about foods, when if they knew such a little bit more about the true constitution of what they use they would be not only better off themselves but they might become reliable guides to others. It is necessary today to discourage the hundreds of people who are setting up as reliable food advisers, when they say things just as unreliable as that. Many a recipe is labeled by such people as without sugar, wheat, or fat, when it does contain all three. This recipe did not contain granulated sugar. It did not contain patented white flour. It did not contain a plain lump of fat, nevertheless it did contain sugar, wheat, and fat.

Because a man thought it was absurd to print a recipe for popcorn consolidated in a loaf, and enriched with a heavy sirup, I have been watching humanity, or rather men, eating. In one case I followed a man with his two small boys while they circled around a big store. He had a bag of popcorn in his pocket and he ate the most of it. He was getting solid food and solid enjoyment, because corn, though expanded in bulk, is nevertheless a good and almost sufficient food. Popped corn contains all that is in the kernel, the fat from which corn oil might be made, the germ, etc. As far as I know the cornflake also contains everything save the hull.

The man that satisfies his stomach and palate by eating popcorn is not likely to seek the saloon, for a number of reasons. To keep certain foods away from people, as some of the restaurants and other eating places do, is no way of proving that they would not eat them if provided.

There are a great many sides to this corn question—this question of corn as something to eat or as real food—besides those that are obvious. Corn in some plain and homely way, in some too dry muffin, in too crumbly and uncrisp a corn bread, in some half cooked mush, is no more a food nor perhaps a yielder of as much nutriment as corn in many a pretty and attractive presentation.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING TO WIN THE WAR?

ENTERTAINING IN WARTIME

GARDEN parties are to replace teas and receptions as the popular form of entertaining for the duration of the war. Such is the suggestion of the United States food administration, at least, and few of the suggestions emanating from that particular quarter go unheeded by the patriotic women of America.

The garden parties are not to be entertainments on spacious lawns with [illegible] trimmed trees, beneath which tables are spread with rare food and delicacies, but garden parties in the sense that on all occasions the food will be furnished from the home or the gardens.

According to the food administration for a church supper, a political rally, a Sunday school picnic, or a "company dinner," it is far more patriotic to use foodstuffs out of the home or local gardens than to eat food freighted into town, because transportation is the greatest problem of the war, and shipping space the most precious thing in the world.

Good as New.

Have you ideas on food, dress, and health conservation to pass along, or ideas on money saving and money raising? This department is an exchange for the women who are helping to win the war. For every letter published "The Tribune" will pay $1. Do you need advice on questions pertaining to this important work of helping win the war. This department will advise you gladly. Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned. Address letters on this subject to Antoinette Donnelley, Chicago Tribune.

In these days we hear a great deal about food conservation, but do we hear enough about conservation of clothing? Believing that every woman should consider it her duty to make use of all available garments and unused cloth in her possession both as a war measure, for the conservation of wool and other materials, and also as an economic measure, to release that much more money for the purchase of bonds and thrift stamps, I decided last spring to take stock of all my clothing, both old and new. I am glad that I did, and want to tell other women of my experiences because this season I have more nice dresses than usual and spent only about half the money.

The modern woman trying to keep up with the exigencies of fashion must needs lay aside many outside garments at the end of the season never to put them on again in their present form. Some of these are outgrown; others are laid away with the belief that some day they will come back "in." I found both kinds. All that were good, but outgrown, I gave away as clothing. Those that were no good, I sold as rags. Some of my last season's dresses I found could be worn without changing, and with the rest I had a systematic "making over."

The dress from which I am deriving the greatest pleasure, and the one which I consider my best success, owing to its origin, is a navy blue heavy wool street dress. It was originally a tailor made suit with a long, narrow skirt open down the front and a tight fitting cutaway coat. It was bought some years ago and was of splendid material, but the style had gone completely out. As it was too good to throw away, it had been lying around the house all this time, so this year I decided to make use of it. Any one with some knowledge of sewing could do the same.

The skirt, though narrow and long, had a wide plait down the front. I ripped up the skirt, letting out the plait and seams as much as possible, turned it inside out because it looked newer that way, and then put the front in the back. There was then, of course, a seam down the middle of the back, but this does not show and it appears to be a two piece skirt. By raising the skirt to the desired length it was full enough. I opened it on the left hip.

The waist was a little more difficult. I chose the pattern I did because I thought the plaits over the shoulder could be added without ripping up the coat, but after getting the pattern I found it would be more advisable to rip it up and cut the parts by the pattern.

The mechanics of the dress being done, I then considered the trimming. For 80 cents I bought sufficient silk for the collar, girdle, sleeve trimming, and buttons. This with 20 cents for the pattern, 5 cents for button molds, and 5 cents for a piece of lining for the plaits was the entire cost of the dress to me. The silk is a plaid combining dull rose, red, shades of blue, and a little yellow. With it I made the collar, girdle, trimming for sleeves, and covering for the buttons. The girdle was made on an old form discarded from a party dress. The buckle I cut out of cardboard and covered with the silk. It is pretty.

I put three buttons on the wide part of each plait in the waist front and back and six on each hip down the skirt. The front is of white lace. It came from another dress and was in good condition. Down the front, to give character to the white, I put tiny silk covered buttons made over small coral beads I had in the house.

The dress is giving me splendid service and I have received many compliments upon it from people who do not dream it is "made over." I shall wear it this season as a street dress without a coat and next winter as a home dress and on the street with a coat. It is truly an example of dress and wool conservation, and it cost me just $1.20.

Fishing for Money.

In a recent effort of the women to raise more money for the Red Cross a brand new and really successful plan was brought forward by two "mere men."

In this drive, while going from house to house, in the effort to collect various articles of value, which were to be sold for the Red Cross, one of the women was met by a rather original offering from a patriotic old fisherman in the shape of four fine large fishing poles, a lot of lines, and several hooks. The old man said it was the best he could do, but he insisted on doing his "bit" to that extent, anyway.

After all available material had been collected, the workers began placing each article or group of articles in available positions for the sale, which was to be held the next day. Also, an estimate of the probable price each article or group would bring was being made. When the old man's fishing tackle was reached the women who were doing this work were "stumped"—they had no idea whether the stuff would sell for 25 cents or as many dollars. So they appealed to a group of bystanders for help.

"They ought to bring at least $3," one of the men ventured. But two other men stepped up, and one remarked: "We've got a better plan than that. Just turn over that outfit to us for tonight and we'll bring in enough fish so that they can be sold for at least $10."

Needless to say, the women thankfully accepted the offer.

Giving a boy standing near a nickel and telling him to get them a nice can of bait, the two men went to work getting the fishing tackle in shape for the night. They fished all night, but not alone, for a large proportion of the male population of the town kept them company.

The old river evidently had determined that night to do its bit toward whipping Kaiser Bill, for when morning came the Red Cross was the possessor of a catch amounting to 152 pounds.

The meat markets were glad to get a fine, fresh supply and at the sale that day the fish were easily disposed of, all in a bunch, for 25 cents a pound. This brought the Red Cross $38.

Needless to say, the fishing tackle was not sold that day nor since. Instead it is being used by various amateur fishermen from two to three times a week and is bringing in a steady stream of money for the Red Cross.

Doris Blake Says

If you were born this week you are

Supersensitive.

Have you a perplexing love affair in which you need the counsel of a friend? Write Doris Blake, care "The Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply send stamped, addressed envelope.

IF you were born during the week beginning today, you are still under the influence of the sign Cancer (June 21-July 21). Cancer people are the most sensitive of the twelve signs. No matter what you are doing, nor how much interested you may be in it, if your feelings are hurt you want to give up the whole thing then and there.

But, laying this aside, you are the most persistent of people, holding on to and standing by a thing to which you have once attached yourself, like your prototype the crab, till it either leads to your ruin or you make a success. Cancer is called a feminine sign. That is, a woman born in this sign is strong natured, positive, and talkative. A man born in it is quiet, negative, and not aggressive.

You seem to feel and suffer from the inharmonious mental condition of those around you and this with your other characteristics makes it easily seen what a contradictory nature you have. Therefore, one is not surprised at the seemingly perfectly unreasonable spells of depression, irritability, and sudden changes of humor which mark you.

But with all this outward crab shell roughness there is no more loving, thoughtful, and tender father, mother, brother, sister, son, or daughter than you are. Your genius is your home. There you blossom into your sweetest nature. Deprived of a home, you are a wanderer on the face of the earth, unhappy yourself and a source of unhappiness to others—cross, morose—all your bad traits in evidence, all your good and tender ones shut back in yourself.

A Cancer person should watch for and fight to death the first symptom of miserliness, love of display, or inconstancy. And yet you people seem absolutely unable to see and realize your own faults. You consider yourselves the soul of truth and fidelity, and criticize others freely on this point, and you are frequently lacking in both.

You have exquisite taste, and with half the outlay of less talented persons could dress beautifully, but as a rule you are unsatisfied with anything short of the extremes of elegance and costliness. You are lazy folk and jealous, yet you will work night and day to get the money you love and give much more cause for jealousy in yourselves than you would take from any other.

As a physician, lawyer, or salesperson you will be most successful because of your originality and keen intuition. Like all Cancer people, you are a lover of literature, being especially fond of history. The women are well adapted to the musical or dramatic profession.

Virgo (Aug. 24-Sept. 23) and Libra (Sept. 24-Oct. 23) will furnish you with true friends, but your conjugal mate is best chosen from Pisces (Feb. 20-March 21) or Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 22).

Your birthstone is the ruby.

Better Housekeeping

By Mary Bronson Hartt

DISPOSING OF WASTE.

UNLESS there's an incinerator in the kitchen and all scraps go up in smoke, the refuse barrel has to be reckoned with. The best place for it, beyond question, is underground. There neither cats, dogs, nor flies can get in, nor odors out.

The patent contrivance with a cover that lifts by foot power would be the first choice, but an amateur substitute is within the reach of everybody. All that is necessary is one drum of sewer pipe sunk in the earth a little below the level of the grass so as not to interfere with the passage of the lawn mower. A layer of pebbles in the bottom of the pipe makes a clean floor for the covered garbage pail, which is to be lowered into the pipe. A wooden disk with a handle, the whole painted green, hides the pail and is itself scarcely distinguishable from the grass.

The average maid would probably complain that stooping to raise two covers to get rid of a strainerful of scraps was paying dear for sanitation. Therefore let us consider the next best thing—the "garbage house" that shuts the pails from sight behind a neat door.

Too often such houses are built with a wooden floor, which catches drops or even scraps spilled over the side of the pail. Too often, therefore, the unpainted wood of the interior gets a chance to absorb odors. The first step toward reform is to get rid of the floor, letting the pails stand on a bed of gravel. The next is to paint the inside of the woodwork. The light frame of the "house" will have to be moved occasionally that the gravel may be cleared of dried scraps, to facilitate which it is well to mount the box on small iron wheels.

Better still is an arrangement by which the garbage can swings out into the open every time anything is emptied into it. A door working on extra strong hinges has a shelf attached to it just about the level of the ground. On the shelf sits the pail, prevented from slipping by a cleat. Opening the door brings out the pail. If anything drops while scraps are going in, it drops in plain sight, where even if not removed at once it lies open to the air and disinfecting sunshine.

Until the day comes when cities, towns, and villages discover that it is the highest economy to pay dear for anything that contributes to public health we shall have the semi-occasional collection of garbage and the problem of the unclean pail. In summer the garden hose, washing powders, and a big strainer to collect washed out bits disposes of the problem. In winter too many housekeepers dispose of it by letting it severely alone. In that case when thaws arrive the pail will need disinfection sorely. One way is to build in it, after emptying, a great fire of newspapers, feeding it till the last trace of odor is burned away.

It is said that a pail coated on the inside with tar does not hold odors and is more easily cleaned.

But for this risk, a gasoline spray would be the best means of protecting stuffed furniture going into storage. The risk is too serious. Risk attaches also to the plan of putting into one corner of a chest of clothing a small bottle of chloroform with a hole bored in the cork to allow the fumes to fill the chest, surely overcoming mothworms. This is all right if nobody opens the chest, bending over it, without remembering the chloroform. The fumes in confinement would be pretty powerful.

Put away moth packages early after beating, brushing, and sunning them thoroughly, turning all pockets and cuffs inside out. Make them odorous with whatever moth deterrent you put faith in—whole cloves in cheesecloth, moth balls, cedar, lavender, tar paper. Let the outer wrappings be intricate and firm; for it has been proved that a moth miller can slide her way into a package which seemed impenetrable. Pack the bundles into trunks or chests made unpleasant with more tar paper or camphor tied in cloth. Then hope for the best.

For furs, a professional advises beating with the butt of a whip, the fur side of the garment being laid on a woven wire spring. The advantage of this is that if eggs should be beaten out, they fall through the spring to a newspaper below, where they can be collected and burned. If any mischief has started, this treatment is likely to betray it. Delicate furs like mole, chinchilla, and ermine would not bear this rough handling. They must be brushed with a whisk broom. After beating comes combing with a furrier's steel comb, which has no fine teeth.

Sunning the professional is less enamored of than most housekeepers, because sun fades furs, even those that have not been dyed. He advises putting up each piece of fur in a separate box, so if one is infected it needn't destroy others, using crystalised naphthalene and close wrappers. Then he proposes that the furs be examined every two or three weeks all summer!

For fine pieces resort to cold storage, where, if either moth, or fire, or thieves corrupt, it's "up" to the storage firm to make good.

Various experimenters suggest amendments. If you paste paper over the cracks of boxes, put strong carbolic in the paste, for both moths and mice delight in eating it. Camphor gum should be kept away from sealskin, as it changes the color. Cotton bags dipped in turpentine and dried make good protectors for garments hung on hangers. A box lined with wood from old cigar boxes will smell so of tobacco that moths will keep out. To keep moths out of stuffed furniture in an empty house, untack the lining under the seats, beat well from above, catching the dust on newspapers, and put back the lining with an interlining of tar paper.

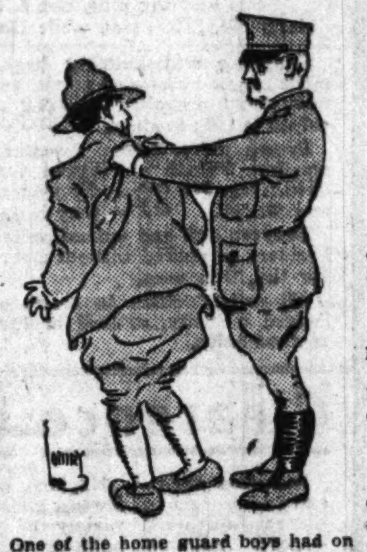
Camp Stories Contest.

Your son, your brother, your husband, or your sweetheart in the service undoubtedly has told you some amusing incident that has occurred in his camp. Undoubtedly, too, there are ever so many stories originating in camp that are still untold. This contest is especially open to the soldier himself if he has a good camp story to tell. It is open also to every one who has been told a good camp story of actual happening. "The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published. Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned. Address Camp Stories Editor, Chicago Tribune.

Looking Him Over.

Our home guard boys had gone to a nearby town to the funeral of a soldier. Gathered at the same place were soldiers from all over the state, among them the commander of all the troops.



One of the home guard boys had on a uniform that was too large for him. While waiting on the station platform for the train to come the commander noticed this boy and coming up to him turned him around and around, looking him over on every side. Finally he said: "Young man, that suit does not fit you."

The boy, not realizing to whom he was talking, promptly retorted: "Well, that is no reason why I should be made a windmill of, is it?"

Luck favored him and the commander laughed.

Where It's Real Noisy.

A pretty girl was eagerly watching drill when a rifle volley crashed out. With a demure little scream she shrank back into the arms of the young man standing behind her.

"O," she cried, blushing, "I was frightened by the rifles! Pardon me!"

"No need," he said quickly. "Let's go over there and watch the artillery."

Just His Size.

A short time ago I visited a friend of mine at Camp Dodge, Ia. While I was there he received a box of candy from his sweetheart. The candy was wonderfully good, but he kept complaining because she had not sent more. Picking up the box, he said: "Now, just look at the size of that box." Then the expression on his face changed and he remarked rather shamefully: "Why, that is the same box I gave her last Christmas."

All in Some Day.

One day at a southern camp one of the Negro soldiers was showing me a service pin with three stars which he always carried in his pocket. I asked him who the relatives were and he replied: "One is fo' maself an' the other two is fo' ma bruddera; one is going to enlist an' the other is in the next draft."

Measured by Miles.

A recruit was asked, "Who is your nearest living kin?"

"My aunt," came the answer.

Then the questions were answered correctly until it came to, "In case of death or accident who shall be notified?"

"My mother," he replied.

"But," said the officer, "I thought your aunt was your nearest living kin?"

"She is," replied the recruit. "She lives two miles from me and my mother lives five."

Before and After.

My brother has just reached France. On being moved from one village to another he wished to thank the kind old Frenchwoman with whom he had been billeted and thought he was saying, "We thank you for your kindness to us while we were here." The girls standing near laughed so heartily that he repeated his sentence later to an interpreter and found that he had said, "before we were here."

Trade Falling Off.

Down in the foreign district I came across a little "hole in the wall" fruit and candy store boldly displaying a service flag bearing thirty-five stars.

"How in the world do you get that?" I asked incredulously.

"The war it take thirty-five of my customers by now."

An Awful Disease.

A friend of mine in one of the camps is a corporal. The occupants of the barracks across the road had been in quarantine for measles. Occasionally one of the men was moved to the hospital. My friend was stricken with a severe case of tonsilitis and one morning the ambulance stopped to take him to the base hospital.

As he entered the ambulance one soldier said, "Has he got the measles?"

A second said, "No, he's a corporal."

The first one answered with a groan, "Good Lord, that's just as bad!"

Naughty Mamma's Boy.

My husband, who is at Camp Sherman, wrote home and told us this joke the boys played on a "mamma's boy" who was the goat of the whole company. One night while he was over to the Y. M. C. A. they fixed up the head of his cot with sticks and tied a string to them, then waited until he got sound asleep and pulled the strings, out came the sticks and down went the bed. He nearly exploded he was so mad and my husband said had you been listening you could have heard him swearing clear home.

LEARN A LITTLE AND SAVE A LITTLE EVERY DAY

By Elizabeth O. Hiller

SAUCES FOR PUDDINGS.

THERE are dainty desserts especially well suited to the hot weather menu. I am still furnishing recipes for the preparation of jams, conserves, marmalades, and fruit butters, regardless of the shortage of sugar. Let us save the latter in other ways that we may have these "goodies" that will help in the conservation of butter next winter, the cost of which will far exceed that of sugar and fruit at the present time. Children only should use butter on their bread, biscuit, toast, etc., when spread with these delicious viands. They need the fat.

Cherry Roly-Poly.

Sift together one cup of corn flour and one cup of white flour, one-half teaspoon of salt, and four teaspoons of baking powder. With the tips of the fingers run in one tablespoon of butter or substitute; then add gradually three-fourths cup of thin cream, mixing with a knife to a soft dough. Turn on a lightly floured board, knead slightly, and pat and roll to one-fourth inch thickness in a rectangular sheet; strew over drained, pitted cherries, previously cooked and sweetened. Roll like a jelly roll, press edges, and close ends as securely as possible. Arrange in a well greased dripping pan and pour around two cups of cold water and one cup of sugar. Bake twenty-five minutes in a oven, basting three times while baking. Thicken the cherry juice with corn starch diluted with cold water to the consistency to pour; the sauce should be the consistency of thin cream, strain into a pitcher, and serve with each slice of roly-poly. It may be necessary to add more sugar to the sauce. Bare in mind that all pudding sauces should be sweeter than the pudding with which they are served.

Cherry Duff.

Sift together one cup of white flour and one cup of barley flour, four teaspoons of baking powder and one-half teaspoon of salt; with the tips of the fingers rub in two tablespoons of butter or substitute; add gradually three-fourths cup of thin cream or rich milk, mixing with a knife to a soft dough. Turn on a lightly floured board, knead slightly, and roll to one inch thickness. Put four cups of pitted cherries into a well buttered baking dish, add two cups of sugar and the juice of half a lemon. Cover with dough, place cover on baking dish [well buttered inside] and set dish in a steamer, replace steamer cover, place steamer over a kettle of boiling water, and steam pudding forty-five minutes. Water in kettle must be boiling rapidly while pudding is steaming. Serve with cherry juice thickened delicately with arrow root and sweetened to taste.

Preserved Cherries.

Wash, pick over, and pit sour cherries. There should be four pounds. Cover cherries with an equal measure of sugar [four pounds] and let stand two hours, then place on range and bring slowly to the boiling point; cook until cherries are tender. Fill half pint sterilized fruit jars first with cherries, then fill to overflowing with sirup, seal and store. If there is an excess of sirup, heat it to the boiling point and pour at once into sterilized glass jars, seal, and store. Use for flavoring ices and sherbet or for pudding sauces.

Spiced Cherries.

Sift together three and one-half pounds of sugar, one tablespoon of ground cinnamon, one-half tablespoon of ground allspice, one-half tablespoon of ground cloves, and one tablespoon of nutmeg. Add one pint of pure cider vinegar, heat to boiling point, let boil five minutes, stirring until sugar is dissolved. Pour over seven quarts of large sweet pitted cherries. Heat to the boiling point for three minutes, stirring meanwhile, then turn into sterilized glass fruit jars, seal, and when cold store. Serve with meats.

Cherry Sauce.

Pick over and remove the stones from ripe, sour cherries; there should be one and one-half cups. To the cherries add two-thirds cup of sugar, one-half glass of currant jelly, juice and grated rind of one-half a lemon, two inch stick of cinnamon, and one cup of claret. Cook slowly until a sirup is formed. Strain and serve. This is a sauce for steamed batter puddings or dumplings.

Raspberry Shrub.

Put two quarts of red or black raspberries into an enameled bowl, pour two cups of pure cider vinegar over berries, cover and set aside in a cool place for twenty-four hours. Strain off liquor and reserve berries. Put two quarts of berries in a clean bowl, pour over strained liquor; cover and let stand twenty-four hours. Strain off liquor, heat to boiling point; add gradually six cups of sugar and stir until sugar is dissolved; let boil gently twenty minutes. Skim and pour while boiling into sterilized pint glass jars, seal, and when cold store. Fill small sparkling water glasses with cracked ice, add four tablespoons of the shrub and fill glasses with cold water. Use remaining berries for spiced raspberries.

Peach and Pineapple Marmalade.

Pare and shred one large, ripe pineapple; peel and stone peaches. There should be seven pounds. Crack a few of the stones and remove the kernels. Put peaches and pineapple into a preserving kettle with just enough water to prevent the bottom layer burning; heat slowly to the boiling point, then simmer until peaches are tender (about one-half hour). Add gradually six pounds of sugar previously warmed in the oven, the peach kernels, and the juice of three large lemons. Bring to boiling point and continue cooking until mixture is the consistency of marmalade (about one-half hour). Skim when necessary. Store in half pint glass jars or in jelly glasses.

Peach Cobbler.

Butter a deep pudding dish and butter the outside of a half pint bowl or teacup and place it in the center of the pudding dish. Fill the space around the cup with peeled and sliced ripe peaches. Sprinkle with sugar and dot over with one and one-half tablespoons of butter and a sprinkle of nutmeg. Cover with a crust made as follows: Sift together one cup each of wheat and corn or barley flour, one-half teaspoon of salt, and four teaspoons of baking powder; with the tips of the fingers rub in two tablespoons of shortening. Add three-fourths cup of milk and one egg beaten until thick and lemon tinted. Mix well. Turn on a lightly floured board, knead slightly, and roll to one-half inch thickness; cover peaches, flute rim with fingers, make two or three gashes in the top to allow steam to escape, and bake thirty-five minutes in a hot oven. Loosen rim with a thin knife and invert cobbler on a deep platter; the cup will be filled with a delicious peach syrup to be used as sauce; if not enough to moisten well, pass sweetened cream in a pitcher.

This is an old fashioned dessert. It is so wholesome and filling that it should be served at the conclusion of a light dinner or made the "chief dish" at a home luncheon. Serve with it iced tea, coffee, or hot cocoa.

Gooseberry Trifle.

Soak over night one-half cup of pearl tapioca in water to cover. Cook in two cups of boiling, slightly salted water until transparent. Cook two cups of ripe gooseberries with one cup of sugar until berries are soft, add one tablespoon of lemon juice and the grated rind of half a lemon. Combine mixtures. Turn into a mold, chill, and serve with sweetened whipped or plain cream.

Pineapple Snow.

Pare, remove the "eyes," and grate a large, ripe pineapple; there should be one and one-half cups of pulp. Add one-half cup of water and three-fourths cup of sugar. Place on range in an enameled saucepan and simmer twenty minutes; soak one-fourth box of gelatine in one-fourth cup of cold water one-half hour; dissolve over boiling water and strain into first mixture. Set saucepan in a bowl of crushed ice and stir until it begins to stiffen, then add the juice of one-half a lemon and the whites of two eggs beaten until stiff. Turn into a fluted mold and chill on ice. Serve with whipped cream sweetened and flavored with orange extract. This mixture may be chilled in individual cups or glasses, unmolded, and served with sweetened cream.

Jellied Pigs' Feet with Horseradish Sauce.

Cook six cleaned pigs' feet slowly in boiling salted water to cover until nearly done, then add one small bay leaf, four cloves, one large onion sliced, two tiny chili peppers, and one sprig each of parsley, thyme, and marjoram, and continue cooking until meat falls from the bones. Remove feet, skim off superfluous fat, and strain the liquid. Remove the bones from the meat and put the latter into an agate brick shaped bread pan, add white wine vinegar to the liquid—there should be an equal measure of liquid and vinegar—and pour over meat to entirely cover it. If there is a much larger quantity of liquid than vinegar reduce liquid by slow cooking before adding vinegar to insure a jellied loaf when cold. (There should be about one and one-fourth cups of liquid and vinegar combined.) Chill over night. Cut in thin slices and serve with horseradish sauce.

Mint Sherbet.

Boil together four cups of water and two cups of sugar fifteen minutes. Add to the hot syrup twelve large sprigs of mint; bruise them with a wooden pestle or spoon before adding to syrup. Let stand at least three hours. Strain, add the juice of two lemons and one-fourth cup of cream de menthe. Color a vivid green with one-half teaspoon of vegetable coloring. Freeze. Properly served with meat or game course.

During the present crisis, make this serve as dessert at dinner or luncheon with lady fingers. Mint sherbet is most refreshing if served in thin glasses with the dainty cakes mentioned above arranged in a nifty basket for the porch or lawn thimble or knitting party.

Hominy and Walnut Croquettes.

To two cups of cooked granulated hominy add one cup of chopped English walnut meats, one tablespoon of melted butter, yolks of two raw eggs or one whole egg, one-half tablespoon of grated onion, one-half teaspoon of finely chopped parsley, and salt, pepper, and a few grains of cayenne to season to taste. Mix ingredients thoroughly. With the hands slightly buttered shape into balls the size of a lemon. Roll in fine cracker crumbs, then in egg slightly beaten and diluted with two tablespoons of milk and again in crumbs. Fry in deep hot fat; drain on brown paper. Arrange on hot serving platter and pour around tomato sauce.

Cheese sauce may be used in place of tomato sauce. These croquettes are an excellent substitute for meat, having a high food value by the addition of nut meats and the cheese sauce. Served at dinner, luncheon, or supper, it makes an ideal hot weather dish.

My Most Embarrassing Moment.

"The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published on "The Most Embarrassing Moment of My Life." Address Embarrassing Moments Editor, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Write on only one side of the paper. No manuscripts will be returned.

An Awful Stew.

Riding home on the street car one evening I wore a white hat with a white Red Cross veil hanging loosely down. An intoxicated man with a bag of popcorn in his hand boarded the car and, coming towards me, grabbed my veil and throwing the popcorn over my head began to sing, "Here Comes the Bride."

Same Old Bonnet.

I was standing outside of church talking with a number of friends when a woman whom I had not seen in several years and in fact had almost forgotten came over to me an made herself acquainted.

"How in the world," I remarked, "did you happen to recognize me in this crowd?"

"Oh," she replied quickly, "I recognized your hat!"

Chasing the Duck.

Last summer I spent my vacation at my aunt's in the country and while there I made a pet out of one of the little goslings. On my departure my aunt gave it to me and procured a paper box in which to carry it home.

Entering the train, I placed the box at my side and immediately forgot it. Some time later I noticed broad smiles on the faces of all the passengers, and to my consternation they seemed directed towards myself. I glanced down and there was my gosling walking gravely up the aisle.

Needless to say, the moments passed in capturing that gosling were the most embarrassing ones in my life.

An Old Family Portrait.

One evening I accompanied my near-sighted old grandmother to pay a call at a neighbor's. The neighbor entertained us by showing family portraits. Finally she handed my grandmother the photograph of a much bewhiskered old man. My grandmother took the photograph, held it upside down, and gazed at it.

"Why, whose dog is this?" I was horrified to hear grandmother ask.

"That is my grandfather," replied our neighbor.

Looking for the Keyhole.

Just before leaving a neighboring "cash and carry" store I took out my doorkey to have ready when I reached home. After loading my arms with bundles I absentmindedly spent some time at the store door trying to find the keyhole to let myself out. I did not wait to see how many customers were enjoying my embarrassment.

C. C.

Stopping a Runaway.

My most embarrassing moment was when I was quite a young woman and happened to be sweeping the sidewalk, when all at once the horses on the ice wagon started off at a fast pace. I, thinking they were running away, ran with a broom after them nearly a full block, gesticulating and yelling loudly. Noticing the people smiling and laughing, I then saw the driver on the wagon.

More than a Glance.

I was sitting in the car on that long 15 cent seat. Next to me sat a girl conversing with a chum not fortunate enough to get a place to sit. The girl standing up handed my neighbor a picture of her "sailor boy" and no one could help but glance at it. I did more though, for I just said, "Gee, he is a dandy looking fellow, isn't he?" I was five miles from home, but the next car was more comfortable.

K. M.

In the Wrong Store.

I walked into a large dry goods store with an old lady. In her girlhood days embroidery was called hamberg, so when the floorwalker met us he asked what they could show us, and the old lady said: "I want to look at some hamberg." The obliging floorwalker replied: "We do not keep it here; you will find it at the butcher shop."

L. M.

Gave a Huge Sneeze.

My most awful moment was—well, it was in a street car, and I gave a huge sneeze. Horrors, my upper set of teeth flew out and landed across the aisle, right in a young woman's lap. I recovered my lost property amidst the howls of the crowd and the blushes of the girl. "That's the first time that happened," was all I could mumble as I retreated to my seat.

BLACK, white, and all the popular shades are well represented in this collection. Most of the stockings are what the manufacturers call "sub-standards" or "irregulars," which means that they have small oil spots or finger marks or very slight defects in the weaving. These are usually difficult to detect and should not impair the wearing qualities in the least. When this wonderful sale joins forces with our great July Clearance, it goes without saying that Monday will be a day of memorable values.

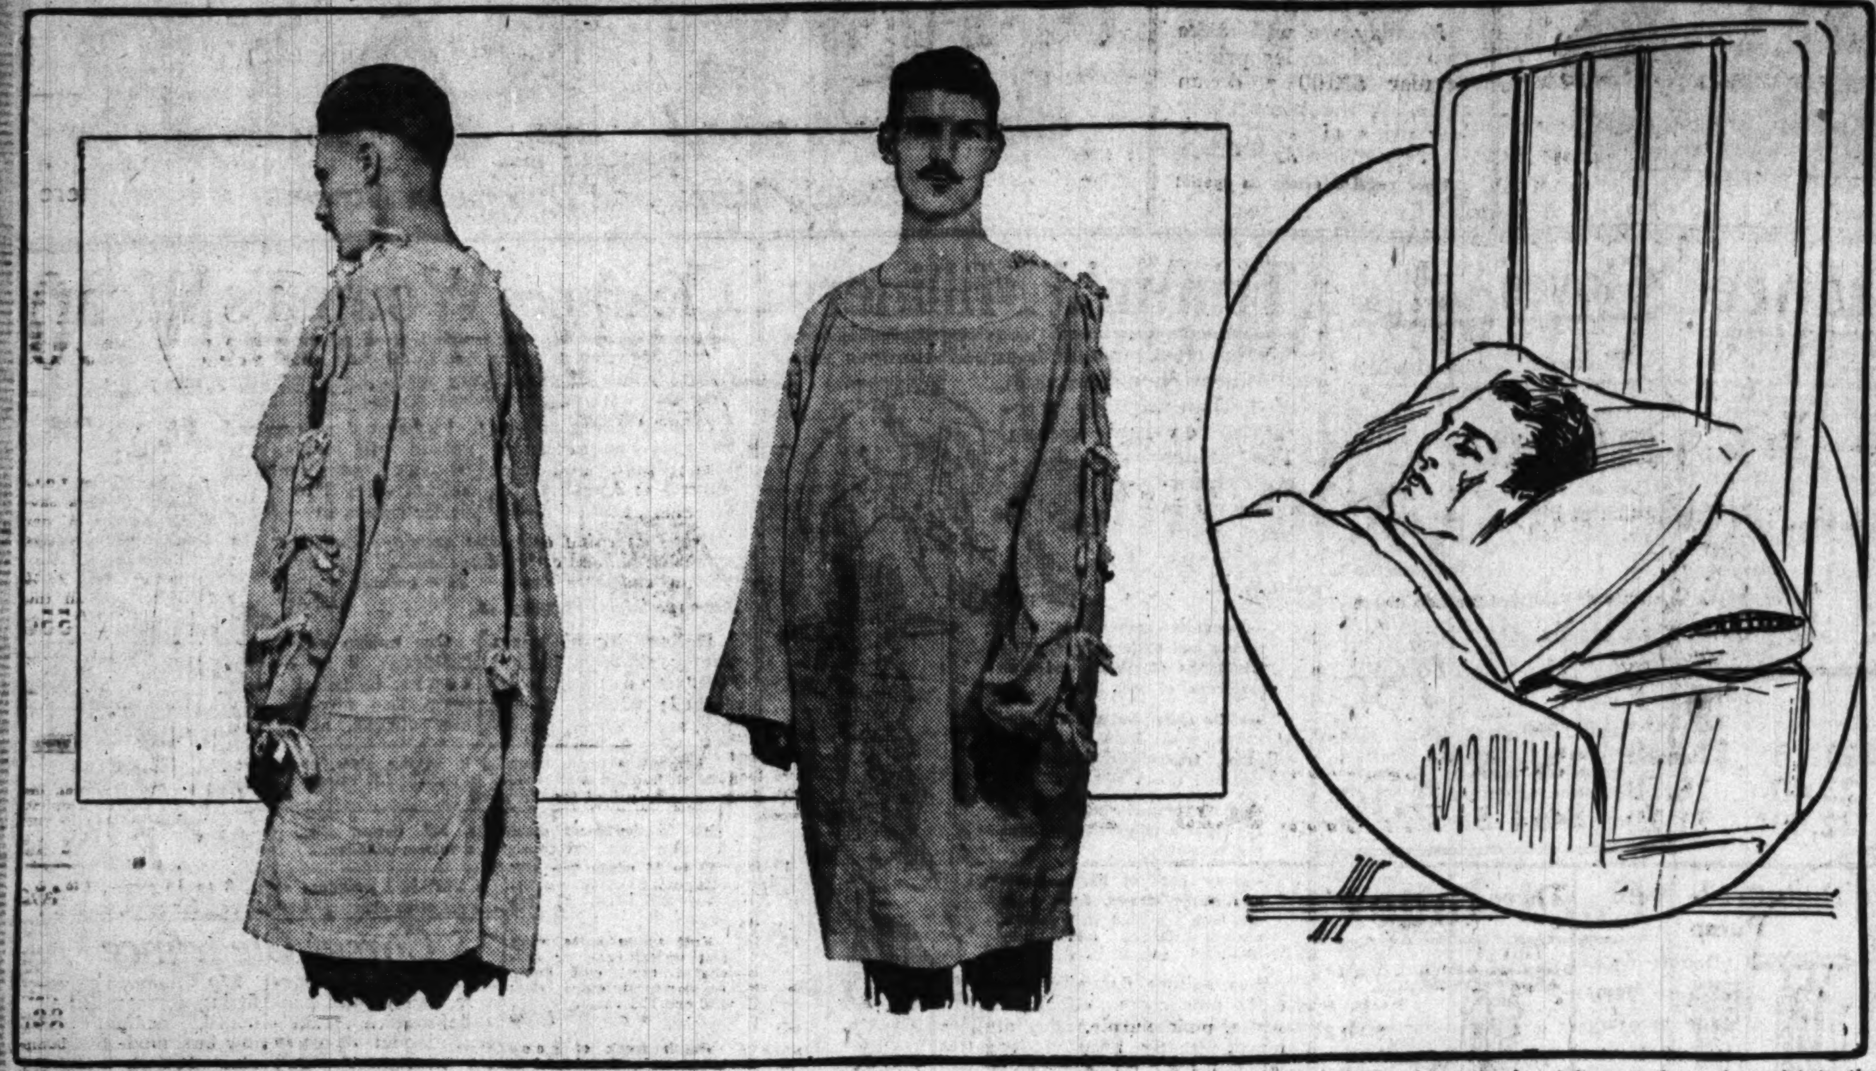
PATRIOTIC and PRACTICAL NEEDLEWORK by Clotilde



THE SURGICAL SHIRT.

The most important thing of the hour is hospital garments. Among them one of the most needed articles is the surgical shirt. With the thousands of wounded men as the toll of the recent fighting on the French front, the hospitals cannot keep on hand a sufficient quantity of these garments to insure each soldier a change from his blood stained uniform unless the women of America will help.

Not only are the allied men in need, but now our boys are taking their share in the suffering of this war. Between two wounded poilus or Tommies it is no uncommon sight now to see a brother in khaki braced up in bed with an indomitable American grin on his face.

The American fund for French wounded has done great service in the past months for our men. Through its headquarters in Paris the supplies go which will help alleviate the hours the boys pass in the hospitals. Patterns for the needed garments may be secured from it, and the finished articles sent to it with the assurance that they will be shipped directly abroad.

Directions for the surgical shirt: The shirt will take three and seven-eighths yards of twilled muslin, thirty-six inches wide; nine yards of twilled tape half an inch wide, and No. 60 white thread. The shirt opens in the back. On the left front is a patch pocket. The shirt is thirty-eight inches long. It measures twenty-five inches across the shoulders. The neck is round, and the shirt opens the entire length of the back, being fastened together by tapes stitched on at equal distances. The left sleeve is not sewn together, but left open from the wrist to the neck and the edges neatly hemmed. It, too, is fastened together with tapes, which are sewn on in pairs five inches apart from the wrist to the neck.

In this way the shirt may be put on or taken from the wounded man with the minimum of discomfort to him.

Patterns for the shirts should be secured from the American fund for French wounded, 60 East Washington street, Chicago.

A SOLDIER'S MOTHER IN FRANCE

BY RHETA CHILDE DORR

HIS SUBSTITUTE FOR HOME.

THE Y. M. C. A. has started a new drive for both money and workers. John R. Mott, general secretary of the national war work council of the association, has announced that they must recruit 1,000 new workers for France and Italy and of course they must have money to support the work already going and that to be started soon.

The exact sum has not yet been announced, but whatever it is the people of this country will give it. To give to the Y. M. C. A. is to contribute directly to the comfort, happiness, and, to a great extent, the safety of our own enlisted men in France. I have been in dozens of Y. M. C. A. huts and canteens, and I say emphatically that our army could hardly maintain its highest efficiency without these places. They are the nearest substitutes for homes that were ever devised for any army.

When troops are quartered in an interesting old French city, as some of our troops are, there are many things in which the soldier off duty can interest himself. But the vast majority of the American soldiers are not quartered in cities or even in towns. They are in camps differing little from the training camps at home, or else they are billeted in villages. In that case they sleep in barns or in peasant cottages. When they are off duty there is not a blessed thing for them to do except walk up and down the muddy streets and talk.

Must Have Their Hut.

Those French villages of the north, especially in winter, are picturesque in the extreme when viewed from a motor car, but as a place of residence they leave much to be desired. A stranger might have some difficulty in distinguishing between the houses and the barns, the huge manure heaps, which are the chief wealth of the owners, being about equally distributed before all the buildings. I have seen scores of these little hamlets, with their signs on each door, giving the number of officers, men, or horses billeted within, and I have sometimes wondered by what process the authorities decided which buildings were for "hommes" and which for "cheveaux." Those are the first two French words our soldiers learn over there.

But wherever our soldiers are quartered, they must have a Y. M. C. A. hut. They cannot get along without it. It serves as a club, a night school, a shop, a library, a theater, lecture room, movie, gymnasium, writing room. It is a great place in which to get acquainted with French people, for next to the Red Cross the Y. M. C. A. is the most admired of all American institutions with which the French have come in contact.

They pronounce it "Egrec, Em, Say, Ah," and most of them have not the slightest idea of what the letters mean, but they highly approve of the thing itself. In the towns and cities they flock to the Y. M. C. A. entertainments, especially the military band concerts. There is little music in France just now, aside from our bands.

The Y. M. C. A. hut and canteen does its greatest work in the isolated camps where the soldiers are cut off from all other recreation. I remember a hut in one of our largest aviation camps, miles away from any town or village. Life in an aviation camp is something like working in a planing mill—the sound of hundreds of aeroplane motors goes on in a ceaseless clatter for hours every day. There is always a strong wind blowing, because aviation camps are located on the biggest, emptiest treeless plains that can be found.

Secretary Good Mixer.

The particular aviation camp of which I write was on the widest, flattest plain in France, I should think. There were not nearly enough machines there when I visited it in early April, and the men had little to do. Hundreds of our fliers in France have never had a chance to do any flying at all, and in this camp, as they said, "If a fellow got a hop once a week he was lucky."

What those boys would have done without their Y. M. C. A. hut I cannot imagine or the secretary. He had been a professor of mathematics in a college somewhere. He was a middle aged, intellectual, rather shy man, and at first I wondered why he had been appointed to such a post. But when I saw him in a crowd of soldiers I no longer wondered. He was easy, genial, sympathetic, tactful, what the politicians call a perfect mixer. When he stood up to introduce the speaker of the evening the boys stamped their feet and whistled through their fingers like kids.

"How will you ever go back to teaching mathematics after this?" I asked him.

"I never will go back," he replied. "I'm going to be human for the rest of my life."

He was being human in that camp so successfully that he almost succeeded in offsetting the lack of planes. At least he did wonders in keeping alive the spirit of courage and hopefulness among the men.

Town's Social Center.

A dozen miles or so from a large southern seaport where many thousands of our men are at work I visited another Y. M. C. A. place, one which has become the social center of an entire French town. In the big town there is a flourishing Y. M. C. A., and when the building camps began to string along the river harbor for miles the secretary in charge saw that extensions of the work would have to be made.

He picked from his staff a remarkable young college girl who speaks good French and asked her if she would go down to a certain small town, the central point of half a dozen camps, and establish a Y. M. C. A. headquarters. She went. She found on the main street, which is also the river front, an old inn where business was getting duller every day, and she rented it. There was no electric light in the house, and the plumbing was early Victorian.

Within a week the house was scrubbed from top to bottom and freshly papered and painted. Within a few more weeks it was wired for electric lights, it had shower baths for soldiers and the only bathroom in the entire town. There was a canteen where 600 men a day could get a sit down meal of good food and a counter where many more could buy chocolates and cigarets. There was a writing and reading room, a room where French lessons were furnished, another where boxing and wrestling matches could be held. There was a piano and a phonograph, and a little way down the street there was a large hall for entertainments.

Larger Quarters Needed.

By this time this girl had asked for and was given an assistant, another live wire of a young woman. They soon had three or four French women for cooks and assistants and they were doing a land office business. When I visited them the entire house was so full of soldiers that the two secretaries were deploring the fact that they had not twice the room, especially for canteen purposes.

Everybody in town uses that headquarters. The mayor goes there to take a bath. Officers from the camps visit it almost as often as the men.

These are two samples only. All the Y. M. C. A. headquarters are doing good work. These two were notable because of the personality of the secretaries, which was above the average. There are many such working for the Y. M. C. A. There were half a dozen at Aix-les-Bains, where our men went for vacation leaves. Some of them had prominent names as well. Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt Jr. was on the staff at the Aix casino. Her tireless work, her frank and democratic manners, delighted the men. "She works, too," they said admiringly. Margaret Deland was another tireless worker at Aix-les-Bains.

Harold, being an only child, would quite frequently express a wish for a sister. Some time ago his cousin Jane paid them a visit, and Harold was kept busy humoring her whims. A few days ago a baby arrived at their home, and when Harold found it to be a wee brother, he said: "Gee, I is glad it ain't a girl—I got all the playin' wif 'Jane's' I wants." V. M. B.

Grandmother was telling Harold about the early days of Chicago, and in finishing her stories said: "Just think, your grandfather was born where the public library now stands." Breathlessly the little fellow asked: "Was grandfather an Indian?" W. B. S.

Oscar had been fishing in a small lake for some time without getting a bite. His father, also out of luck, said: "We'd as well go home, Oscar. It doesn't seem to be a good day for fish." "O, I guess it's all right for the fishes," said Oscar. "I think we're the ones that are doing the kicking." J. R. H.

Virginia had been ill and had of necessity been indulged until she was considerably spoiled. After her recovery she was left one evening with grandma while mother went to the "movies," and, to put it mildly, she was a naughty little girl. After repeated reproofs and expostulations, even grandma's patience was worn out, and she was taken upstairs to bed somewhat earlier than usual. On the way grandma said, "Virginia, you have been a naughty little girl tonight; you deserved to be spanked." Baby was thoughtful a moment and then replied, "Well, but-er, dran'ma, oo pitty near dot sassy wid me, too." E. R. B.

While teaching "Sweet and Low" to the children one morning I took the alto with their high tremulous little sopranos, which delighted them immensely. The following morning my throat was sore, so I did not take my usual part. The children, noticing my silence, stopped in the middle of the song and said, "O, won't you please sing kind-a out-a tune, like you did yesterday?" G. Z.

Donald McDonald was given a puppy and a few days later a caller said, "Donald, what have you named your puppy?"

It had not occurred to Donald to name it, and he was thoughtful for a moment. Then his face lighted up and he replied: "I dun know; Puppy McDonald, I dess." J. M. G.

Allen heard his mother complain about the great number of lady bugs everywhere in the house. He watched them for a long time, then asked, "You call them 'she'; ar'n't there any gentlemen lady bugs?" J. L. T.

One day recently I came home hot and tired about noon, with two pails of blackberries I had gathered from the woods nearby. My little son met me at the door and asked if I was going again that afternoon. "O, no, dearies, mother's too tired," I told him.

"I knew you was too tired," he said apologetically, "but you never know what women's has in their minds." T. L. K.

Gladys was visiting her aunt and one day as they went uptown Gladys noticed three rather untidy children playing, and remarked about them.

"There are ten children living in that house," said her aunt, "and only one mother to care for all of them, so she cannot always keep them as clean as mothers who have only one or two."

"Sen," said Gladys, "why, they can have a party without inviting any one." O. K.

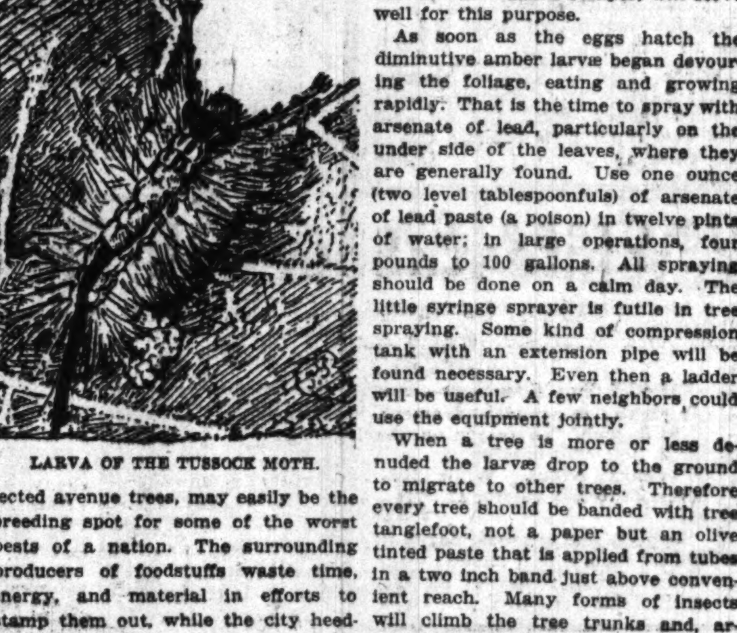
DESTRUCTIVE TUSSOCK MOTH.

THE indifference of city people to plant life and its natural enemies is, in a large measure, responsible for the difficulty experienced by farmers, gardeners, and orchardists in stamping out diseases and noxious insects. A great metropolis, with its extensive parks and neglected avenue trees, may easily be the breeding spot for some of the worst pests of a nation. The surrounding producers of foodstuffs waste time, energy, and material in efforts to stamp them out, while the city heedlessly breeds them.



LARVA OF THE TUSSOCK MOTH.

Here is the letter of C. W. F., which voices the indignation of many similar complaints received:

"Hundreds of the fine shade trees in the parkways of Irving Park are being destroyed by tussock moth caterpillars. I understand the city forester is in charge of this matter and at the request of several who are interested in saving our beautiful trees, I called him up and he informed me they had done nothing in the line of protecting trees for over five years. The more taxes the public pay the less they get for their coin. It seems to be up to the people of Chicago, if they want their trees sprayed or trimmed, to get busy and have it done or do it themselves."

This is one phase of the result of inaction; another is brought out by one of the questions below. It must be borne in mind that the tussock moth is not merely an enemy of shade and ornamental trees. It is omnivorous and destroys the foliage (which constitutes the lungs) of fruit trees as well, and even attacks the fruit, particularly apples. Linden, maple, hawthorns, roses, in fact, any deciduous trees and shrubs, are preyed on by the lurid caterpillar of the tussock moth.

The larvæ are about one and one-half inches long when full grown. Their distinctive markings render them easily identified—a bright, red head, with two long, black plumes; an amber colored body with three dark stripes, four white tufts or tussocks on the back and another upright plume at the hind end; long, yellowish hairs are scattered along the entire body—an emperor in uniform is not more gorgeous nor more predatory.

When gorged to full size it spins a cocoon around itself and spends a brief resting perod in this, to emerge in August or in spring as mature insects, ready to multiply.

The male moth has prettily marked ash gray wings with a spread of about one and one-quarter inches. The fat, gray brown female is wingless. She proceeds at once to deposit from 300 to 500 eggs within a white, frothy mass, on the bark of the trees or on the cocoon from which she emerged.

The conspicuous, white egg masses may be seen everywhere during July and August and again in winter. They become quite brittle as they dry and that is the time to get after them, breaking them off the trees and destroying them with fire. A stiff wire hook, attached to the end of a fishing rod and used like a scraper, will serve well for this purpose.

As soon as the eggs hatch the diminutive amber larvæ began devouring the foliage, eating and growing rapidly. That is the time to spray with arsenate of lead, particularly on the under side of the leaves, where they are generally found. Use one ounce (two level tablespoonfuls) of arsenate of lead paste (a poison) in twelve pints of water; in large operations, four pounds to 100 gallons. All spraying should be done on a calm day. The little syringe sprayer is futile in tree spraying. Some kind of compression tank with an extension pipe will be found necessary. Even then a ladder will be useful. A few neighbors could use the equipment jointly.

When a tree is more or less denuded the larvæ drop to the ground to migrate to other trees. Therefore every tree should be banded with tree tanglefoot, not a paper but an olive tinted paste that is applied from tubes in a two inch band just above convenient reach. Many forms of insects will climb the tree trunks and, arrested in their travels by this band, congregate under it in great numbers. They should then be killed.

Answers to Inquiries.

Q.—1. Please tell me what is the coating on the inclosed twig cut from a dead lilac in Garfield park. 2. I find that practically all the dead bushes in west side parks are similarly coated. Did they die from this and will the living shrubs showing such coating die from it? 3. I live on a street fronting Garfield park. Will my trees or shrubs catch this disease from those across the street? If so, what can I do to protect them? They cost me much time and money. 4. I notice many dead or dying elms, ash, and other trees in the west side parks. Are my still robust trees exposed to any danger from these? If so, what can I do to protect them?—I. A. G.

A.—1. Oyster shell scale. 2. Their vitality was sapped by these, by unpruned suckers, and by want of cultivation, rendering them an easy prey to abnormal climatic and atmospheric conditions and to disease. Those still living will ultimately succumb to the same conditions. 3. They will unless faithfully sprayed with lime-sulphur solution, in the dormant state, for scale insects and fungus diseases, with arsenicals for tussock moth and chewing insects, and with nicotine sulphate for plant lice. 4. They are, particularly if those in mind died of infectious diseases. Get in touch with the park authorities and perhaps with negligent neighbors and coöperate with them in removing all source of danger.

PORCH FURNISHINGS

LIVING out of doors has become so popular in city and country that manufacturers devote much of the talent of their best designers to the making of suitable outdoor furniture. Several simple essentials do not vary with the varying styles. Materials should be so light in weight that the pieces will be easily handled. Things that are too cumbersome to be lifted about are tabooed. For this reason, wicker, reed, and willow retain their favor.

In addition to the necessary portability—in spite of it, perhaps, we should say—the furniture must be durable, rugged enough to stand the wind and rain open porches are subject to, and shapes while planned for ease must have grace as well as airiness.

A type of porch furniture that has jumped into the maddest popularity is the French iron furniture, such as used in the little garden cafés in Paris. These are made in slender forms, painted quite gayly, and supplemented with wrought iron plant stands, small tables, lamps, and lanterns, which cannot be objected to on account of the weight, as they are supposed to be stationary and proof against the elements.

Such a variety of porch furnishings are to be had that it is hard to select the most describable. There are tea wagons, couches, swings, hanging baskets, etc. A new pair of tête-à-tête chairs with a little stationary tray built in between is shown to the left in the drawing. It is a cunning little trick upon which breakfast could be served for two on the minutest balcony.

Those of us who have learned to love floor cushions sing their praises high as porch accessories. Young people perch upon them on the top steps as readily as birds perch upon telegraph wires, with all the merry twittering that musics the springtime of life. These cushions accord in measurement to the step, being long and narrow. They are moss or hair filled, squared at the edges, and covered with neatly boxed slip covers of denim. Pretty ones are made of navy blue piped with lemon color.

Porch color schemes this year are particularly audacious. "I want my porch to be as gay as a bed of tulips," said a young matron, and this voices the general desire.

Oriental red enters into favorite schemes. Primitive patterns, peasant embroideries, and painted motifs all have their place. Table tops under the glass are decorated either with brush or needlework, in the most striking fashion. Ornamental handbags are strung about purely as decoration, and awnings—well, awnings have just simply taken the law into their own hands. Awning curtains, immoderately long, of wonderful striped Sienna brown stuff are made so that they may be left hanging straight down or so that the lower end may be pulled out beyond the porch, and by means of two poles at the corners extended out into the garden beyond the porch. This is a mode adopted from Italy and Spain.

Arbors, summer houses, and trellises are all wonderful, but, alas, we ordinary city dwellers count ourselves lucky enough if we have even a back yard of which to make an outdoor living room. Even the most ordinary back yard, though, may be made a fit and private place for summer living.

I have in mind a narrow city yard, belonging to a house "in a row," with an alley back of it. It seemed quite hopeless, because on the other side of the alley were the side windows of a flat building. They seemed to look down into that yard a thousand strong. The owner decided to take down the low solid fence, and build up a high lattice fence. Grass and flowers would not grow because of the shade caused by close building, so the ground was covered with a cement floor. Beam-like pieces were brought pergola-wise across the top of the lattice work, and a sort of roof supplied by means of wide awning strips, that could be shifted back and forth on ropes and rings. Several small evergreen trees in great cement pots were placed about, and a few vines trained from the outside of the lattice. Then as a finishing touch a garden fountain was added.

The furniture was simplicity itself, a few hourglass chairs, a bench or two and a big round solid table, an old fashioned swinging hammock, a few linen covered pillows, and comfort was complete in a charmingly restful spot, teasingly concealed from curious eyes.

For garden use, garden umbrellas, made of awning striped stuff, are tremendous in their proportions, large almost as tents. They are made to tip any desired angle, are madly trimmed with tassels, and are usually centered on round tables for support. Light garden chairs in sets of six are made to match the table. They afford pleasant shelter at the side of tennis or croquet lawns.

Cheerfully useful among the [illegible] aids to outdoor comfort are the many novel accessories of the season. Inexpensive are little round Chinese porch fads; these may be kept in ricks much the size and shape of a small round four legged table turned upside down. The cushions are of straw, cunningly woven of grass, and measure from 12 to 16 inches in diameter.

"A perfectly darling" little lacquered table is converted into a tea wagon by merely being placed on tiny rubber tired wheels. These little patent wheels revolve and turn readily. They are much like casters, only wheel shaped. This table has a detachable lacquered tray top, and the tea set for ice tea is composed of six tall glasses, with hollow stemmed glass spoons that may be used as straws. Instead of the glass pitcher, which is usual with a set of this kind, a great big black Chinese china teapot is used. This is ornately ornamented with peonies and vine sprigs.

Baskets for porch use are liked in place of knitting bags. They set so snugly on the floor beside the wicker rocker or chaise longue. They are silk lined, enameled, and have flowers painted on them, or are trimmed like hats with artificial fruit.

ETIQUETTE

By Elizabeth Van Rensselaer

Any question on etiquette will be answered if you write to Elizabeth Van Rensselaer, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply inclose a stamped, addressed envelope.

THANK YOU NOTES.

AMONG the many small courtesies which do their bit to oil life's machinery, "thank you" notes hold a most important place. The guest who departs without promptly sending her hostess a cordial, sincere "bread and butter" letter incurs a black mark against her name which no amount of charm and affability can ever quite erase, for she has neglected that extra, painstaking little duty that is one of the accepted tributes to a delightful visit.

The polite acknowledgment of Christmas, birthday, or commencement presents, of engagement and wedding gifts is also a personal note. It need not be long, but it should convey the true sentiments of the writer and assures the donor of the pleasure her offering has brought.

Brides are sometimes careless in this matter. Many of them are not prompt, or, if they are, their notes are so impersonal and indefinite that with a space left for the name at the top, they would—like commercial form letters—do for any one. It is a good plan to mention the gift specifically. Such notice is agreeable evidence that an impression has really been made.

There are few other expressions in the English language so universally helpful as "I thank you," few times when it cannot be used to advantage, and though the number of men and women who neglect it in daily speech is, I believe, comparatively small, there are a great many of us who are not punctilious enough by half about putting it down in black and white, when time and occasion demand.

E. L.: Since your mother and teacher were already talking together when you joined them, you made no serious mistake if not introducing them to each other. However, if they feel a little uncomfortable about the matter, you might, when next you three are together, say how glad you are to have them meet, as you have wanted them to know each other for some time.

M. M. W.: It is correct for a young woman to leave one card for each woman upon whom she is calling. If her hostesses are at home the cards are left on a tray provided for that purpose, or on a convenient table; if not, they are given to the maid.

* *

H. A. D.: Iced tea and cucumber sandwiches (made with war bread) make a dainty and refreshing repast at afternoon tea time, when a few friends have dropped in to knit and chat.

This, That, and the Other

By Percy Hammond.

IN the substitute cast of "Friendly Enemies" no perceptible rattling as of little feet in shoes too large offends the finnicky ear of the local theatergoer. That is to say that "Gus" Weinberg and "Al" Shean, comparative obscurities in the upper drama, perform so well in place of Mr. Mann and Mr. Bernard that there is still clarion utterance of the play's message—which is that the best way to make a good American of a good German is to use explosives.

I was one of those who imparted to Mr. Houseman the fear that Messrs. Weinberg and Shean would be, if not inadequate to their assignment, at least dimmed in the umbra cast by the departed glories.

Mr. Mann is a notable masterpiece of large minutiæ, whispering all the loud, histrionic outcries, and rendering subtle the unsubtle. He makes bad acting good; and he tells the lies of the theater shrewdly and well. Mr. Bernard, a frank and gusty clown of irresistible personality, is a wizard in the relation of effect to cause. He knows the market value of inflection, accent, nuance, better than better players; and his impersonation of the German with the soul of an Ally was a wonder-work of actorial bravado.

What chance, it was said, will two [illegible] have with this "Friendly Enemies" orange, after such thirsty [illegible] kings as Mann-Bernard have sucked it dry? It is, perhaps, not because Mr. Mann gave me and that I accepted a gorgeous and unsuccessful meerschaum pipe upon his departure that I suspect that Mr. Weinberg pinch-hits for him less successfully than Mr. Shean does for Mr. Bernard.

For Mr. Mann's rôle—a fantastic here and there, this and that, up and down, to and fro, black and white, wise and foolish, kind and cruel, intelligent and unintelligent, German and American—is a baffling task for one who is not practiced in the intricate habits of the dramatic prestidigitator. Mr. Weinberg is clever and honest, but he has no tricks. He does not juggle, and when he transforms the Prussian vulture into the American eagle, you see the long hair which endeavors to deceive you. He is, in other words, better, but not so good.

Mr. Shean has the more credible impersonation, has he not—that of the German-born who is faithful and true to the nation that has adopted him and made him rich? Yes, he has! But he is one of those happy, blithe, truculent, and secure citizens who are above the draft age, and who have no sons old enough to go to war. How eager is he for others to engage in battle, and how popular he is with those whose service flags are safely in the future. Yet he is comic, and he illustrates the ease with which it is possible to be star-spangled without discomfort other than the income tax. Let us, for the moment, put our gum beneath our chair and look him over. He is not quite right, this fellow, is he, since no one should be talkative for war unless he or his blood is in the war. Should we not have a lot of silence from those who have not undergone the great emotion? Something tells us that we should.

Mr. Orris Holland, who portrays in the new edition at the Woods the Bevo lieutenant, is handsome, but, one suspects, he would be better cast as Pollyanna, he is so sweet. No one in the Marines, at least, calls his mother "mama" in such a high voice; and he is otherwise open to what is, in the play, going to happen to him. Did one hear him call his father "da-da"? One hopes that one did not. Mr. Holland has much junk to utter. Arguing with his German father about American ideals, he cites the Civil war. "American white men," says he, "killed each other to make black men free," and no one in the enthusiastic audience stopped chewing gum for a moment to think that almost as many American white men killed each other at the same time to make black men slaves. Well, as Mr. Shipman, the author of "Friendly Enemies," says, "Why write a good play when they fall for this."

Executives of the recent "Out There" tour have issued a statement in which it is inferred that the Red Cross officials were not especially gracious to the actors and their $700,000 enterprise. One important member of the governing body, it says, insisted on the company paying their own railway, as well as hotel bills; another, in Washington, declared that he had never heard of any of the stars involved, except George M. Cohan; a Chicago representative objected to the Red Cross assuming responsibility for the advertising, and in St. Louis the organization refused to have anything to do with the benefit, the receipts of which for a single performance there, were $32,882. The manner of the statement is more of sorrow than of anger.

To further the Y. M. C. A. quest for overseas entertainers, Francis Rogers, who has just returned from France, will be in Chicago from July 17 to 19, to confer with local recruiting committees.

A melodrama of 100 persons called "Mother's Liberty Bond" is imminent in New York. It is by Parker Fisher and is a by-product of the war.

You never can tell. The Rev. Thomas P. Dixon has purchased a 25 per cent interest in "Flo-Flo," an entertainment consisting largely of corsets and legs. Yes, you can.

The return of George M. Cohan to the stage is, of course, an annual possibility, but at the present moment there appears to be more ground for such a supposition than ever before. Mr. Cohan, it appears, finds that writing plays, rewriting plays, managing plays, and acting in the nickel-shows do not begin to take up all his time, and accordingly he will appear again around Christmas in a revue of his own authorship. It is an open secret that the Cohan motion pictures have been a disappointment, and it may be that appearances on the regular stage will take the place of future film work.

Donald Brian's announced musical comedy from the French evidently did not assay as well as expected, for he is rehearsing one with words by Bolton and Wodehouse and music by Ivan Caryll. "The Girl Behind the Gun" is the name of it. Miss Wilda Bennett, late of "The Riviera Girl," will be the prima donna, and Jack Hazzard the comedian. Miss Ada Meade, John E. Young, and Frank Doane will take part in it.

In a musical version of Avery Hopwood's "Seven Days," Miss Georgia O'Ramey, whose comic behavior was a feature of "Leave It to Jane," will be prominent. Otto Harbach is adapting it to music by Rudolph Friml.

The will of the late Richard Mansfield II. bequeathing an estate of $14,000 to his mother, has been probated in New London, Conn. Mr. Mansfield, a student aviator, was killed at Fort Sam Houston.

Travel-taxes do not dismay the fortunate producer of "Friendly Enemies," for he will have four organizations presenting that German-American comedy next season. The Mann-Bernard affiliation will perform in New York City, and other companies will be headed by Charles Winninger and Jess Dandy, Dick Bernard, and Sam Moore; and Gus Weinberg and Al Shean, who are now busy at the Woods.

Conrad Nagel, who acted the regenerated wastrel in "The Man Who Came Back" at the Princess, has selected the navy as his favorite brand of the service, and has enlisted.

Sir George Alexander's will bequeathed his rights in the plays of Oscar Wilde to Wilde's son, Vyvian Holland. His fortune of $500,000 will be divided among four London charities after the death of Lady Alexander.

When Miss Laurette Taylor comes to Powers' next December, a leading member of her company will be Miss Lynn Fontanne, late of "A Pair of Petticoats."

Music for a revue in a New York restaurant has been written by James K. Hackett, who, since he acquired riches and withdrew from the stage, has turned his mind to composition. The title of the work is "The Spice of Life."

Burns Mantle's New York Letter

NEW YORK—[Special Correspondence.]—About the only way the New York chorus girl ever gets her name in the papers is by having herself smashed up in an automobile accident on the way home. That and her occasional appearance in the court records as the party of the second part, seem to be her only off stage activities that the press considers worth relating.

But once a year or so the chorus girl asserts her rights as a worthy little feminist and does something that demands and receives the attention of the public. Just now, for instance, she has organized a benefit performance for the Soldiers and Sailors' hospital which is attracting wide attention. She and her sisters, of whom there are some thousands hereabout, either working or looking for work, are to give the entire entertainment from song and dance to war sketch. They will stage and direct all the acts, sell the seats, take the tickets, do the ushering, and open the doors of taxis and motor cars at the curb.

The benefit has not only attracted attention to the chorus girl but has emphasized her importance to the New York theater. Without her it would be the deadest of institutions. Two-thirds of the entertainment on Broadway is musical. Take the choruses away from this and there would be nothing left—no Winter garden, no "Follies," no "Hitchy-koo," no burlesque, and very little vaudeville. When correspondents and tourists and other fictioneers speak of the bright lights of Broadway they refer in a general way to the corset and table water advertisements, but they know in their hearts that Broadway would not live by lights alone and that the real illuminators are what the Longacre square lads refer to unchivalrously as "the gals." They give the redeemed tenderloin its character and its life, because they are the vertebræ, the props, and the foundation of its most popular sideshows.

The chorus girl, too, is beginning to realize her importance. Not many seasons back it was possible to advertise for fifty girls to fill thirty-five $18 a week jobs and crowd a stage door alley or a producing manager's suite and all the halls leading thereto with personable applicants. Now a $20 offer brings out only candidates for the second line and $25 and $30 are common offers.

There is a young woman dancing in the midnight entertainment on the Century roof who went on the stage two seasons ago, when the Dillingham-Ziegfeld company was staging "Miss 1917" in the theater downstairs. She is a pretty girl and a good dancer, but there were many others as clever as she in the huge Century chorus and no particular attention was paid her. At the end of the season she decided that the life of a chorus girl was not all it was said to be nor the wage she was paid worth the energy and nerve force she was burning up to earn it. So she went back to stenography.

The next season, her name being still on the list of prospects, several managers tried to engage her, offering the top salaries paid members of the ensemble, but she determined to stay where she was and become a private secretary. Finally when the Century roof show was being organized last spring Morris Gest sent for her again and made a more liberal offer to tempt her back on the stage. Hearing that Gest was bargaining with this particular young woman, Florenz Ziegfeld also sent for her and offered $5 a week more than Gest. By this time she had begun to waver. Back she went to Gest with a report of what Ziegfeld had offered, and then to Ziegfeld with what Gest had offered until she boosted her salary to $50 a week—and she only one of the line, with a bit of a solo dance. It happened, however, that she was pretty and small, and for some unaccountable reason small girls were hard to find last season. Usually they are present in flocks. But recently, probably because "cutie" numbers have been a sort of fad the last few years, it has been impossible to keep the ranks of the little girls filled.

There are not many chorus girls, however, who have that kind of an experience; not many of them who are shrewd enough to drive so businesslike a bargain. I have in mind the experience of a little chorus girl who was singled out for special praise last season. By stepping out of the line during a dull musical show, and contributing a wild little dance that caught the fancy of a bored crowd, she became the sensation of the moment. Next day the reviewers mentioned her enthusiastically as the savior of a dull evening. Within the week she had been approached by a half dozen rival managers and several vaudeville agents, each of them eager to take advantage of the advertising she had received. Her head may not have been turned, but she naturally thought she was at last on the high road to success. The next season she would have a solo dance, perhaps, and the season after that a small speaking part. But nothing came of her dreams. I inquired for her the other day and discovered that she was back in the chorus line again, broken hearted but game.

This is a more typical chorus girl experience than the other, for their tragedies are still more numerous than their triumphs. Last week it was reported that one of the Century roof girls had been called out of the line and made a stage manager. The stage crew had been decimated by the call of the draft and as this young woman was thoroughly experienced and had been long in the chorus the management had decided to follow the lead of other employers of labor and appoint her to the work of a fighting man.

It happens that back of this small triumph there is a story. This particular chorus girl has been prominent in musical comedy productions for ten or twelve years. She is married and the mother of a child half as big as she is. Her husband is employed in a

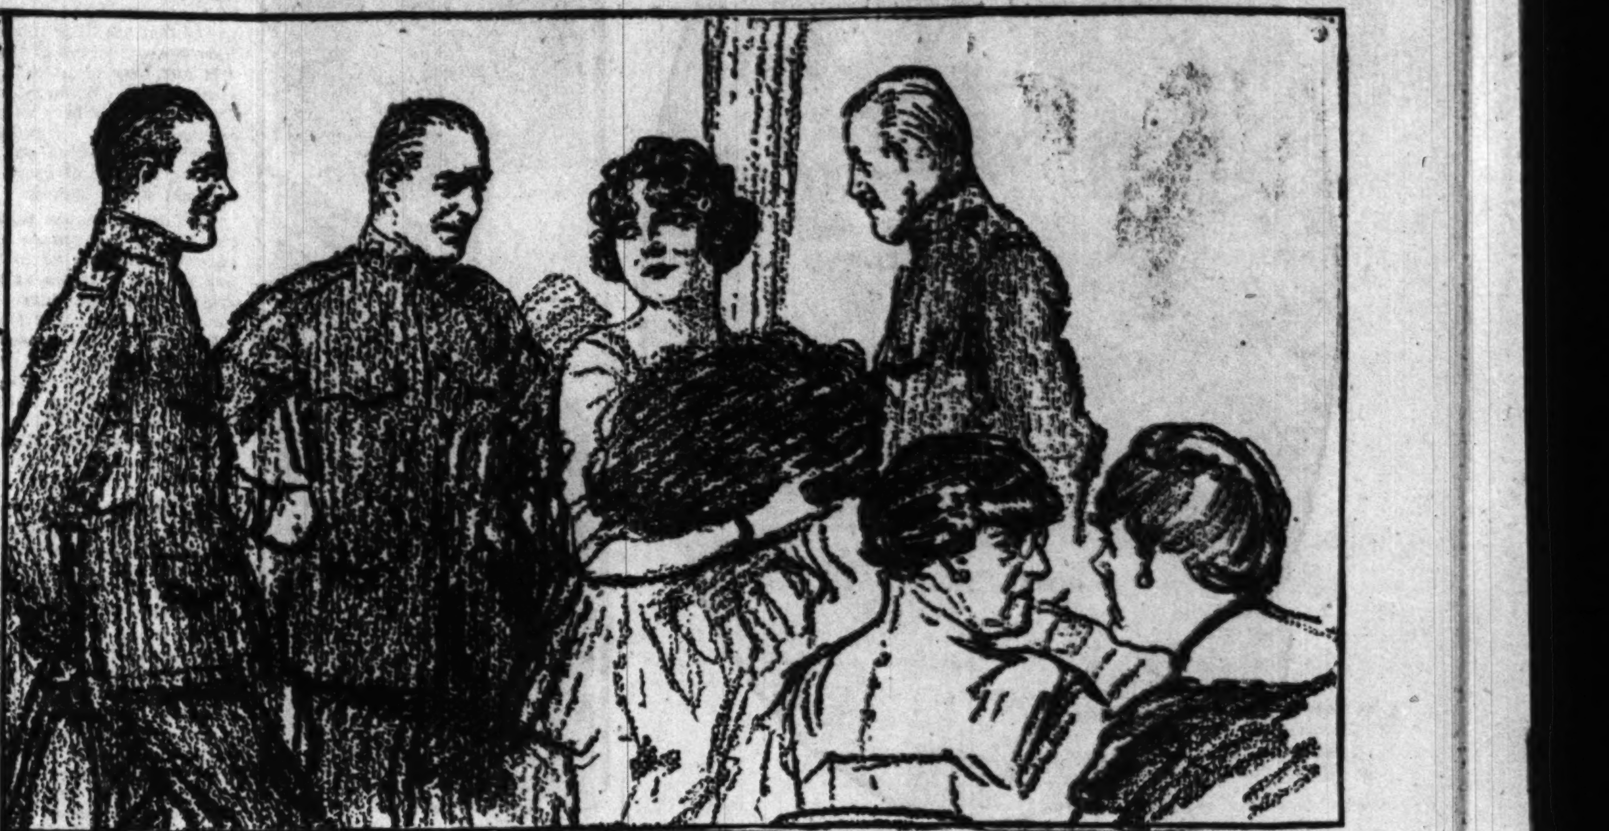
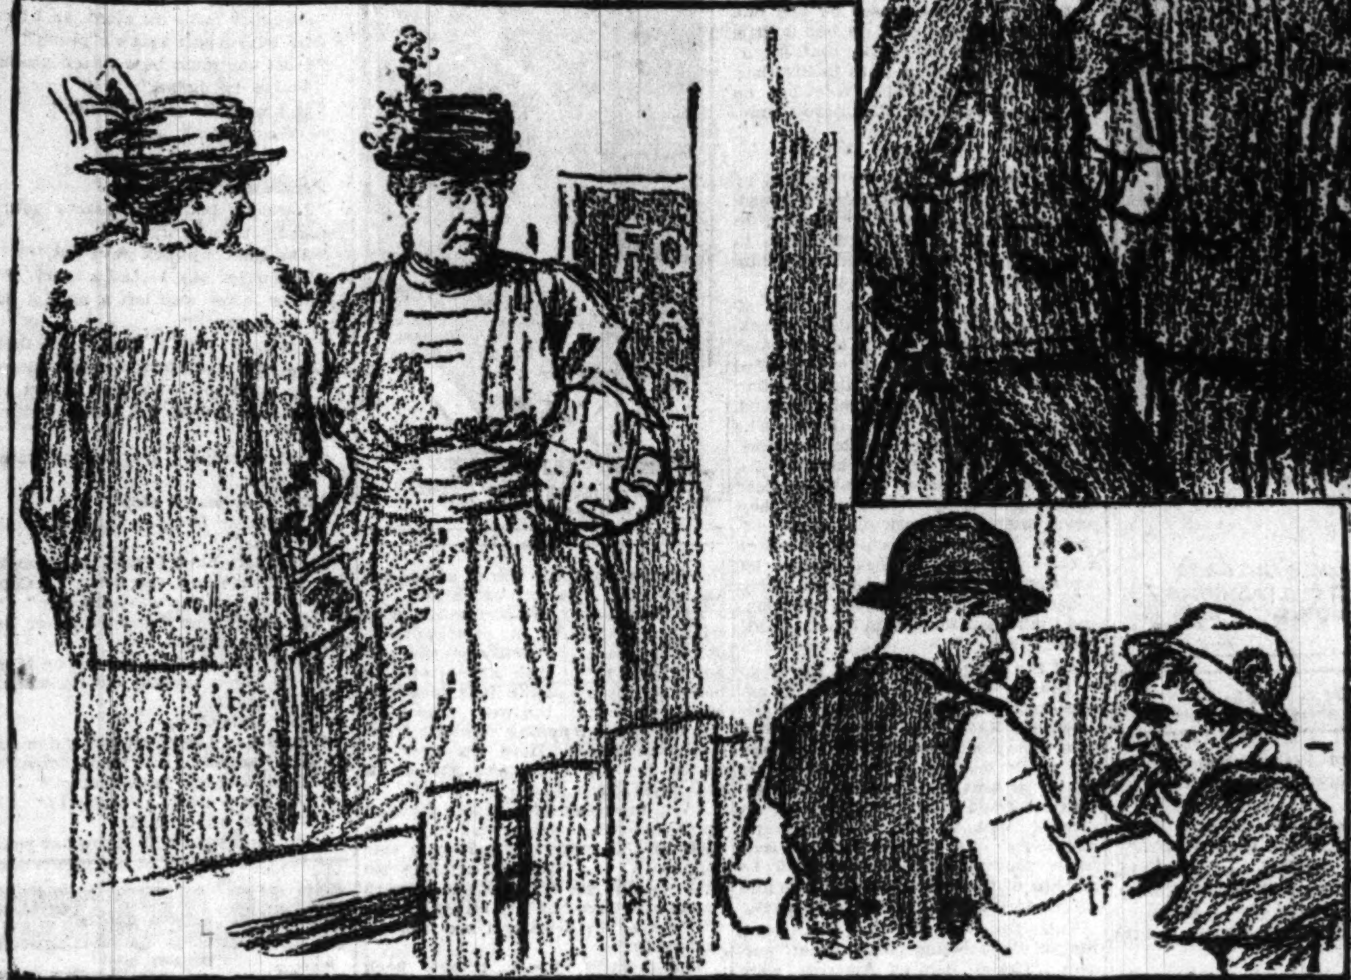
AMONG US MORTALS

WITH THE HOME-GUARD

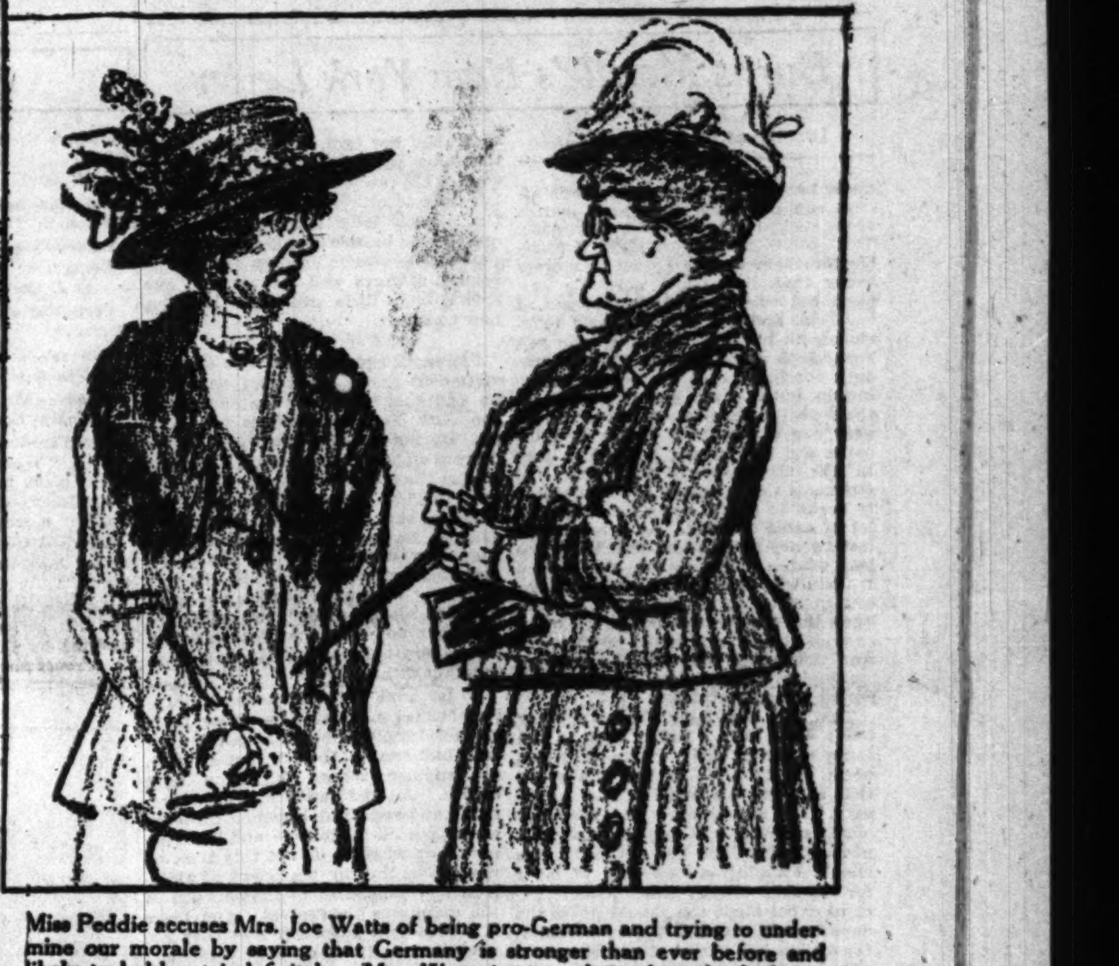
By W. E. HILL



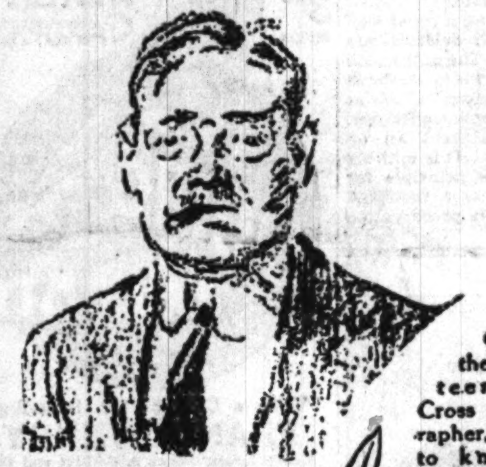
"What's she doing with all those young officers—that's what I'd like to know; asking them if they expect to go over before long. I think she ought to be watched!"



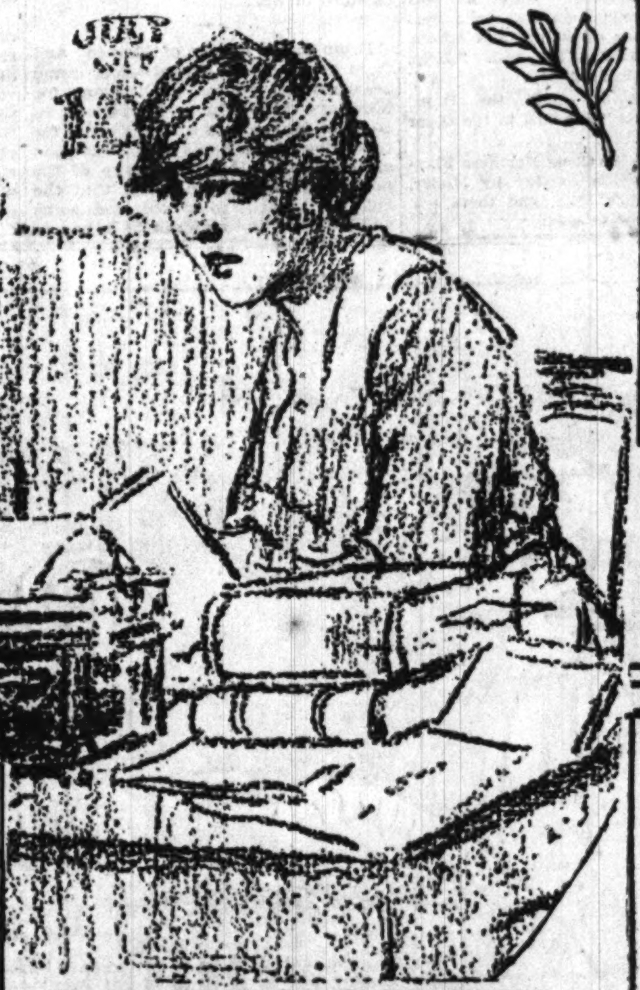
"My dear, there's something very queer about that!" Mrs. Wollop, ever on the lookout for spies, is convinced that no ordinary day laborer would have chocolate cake in his lunch box.



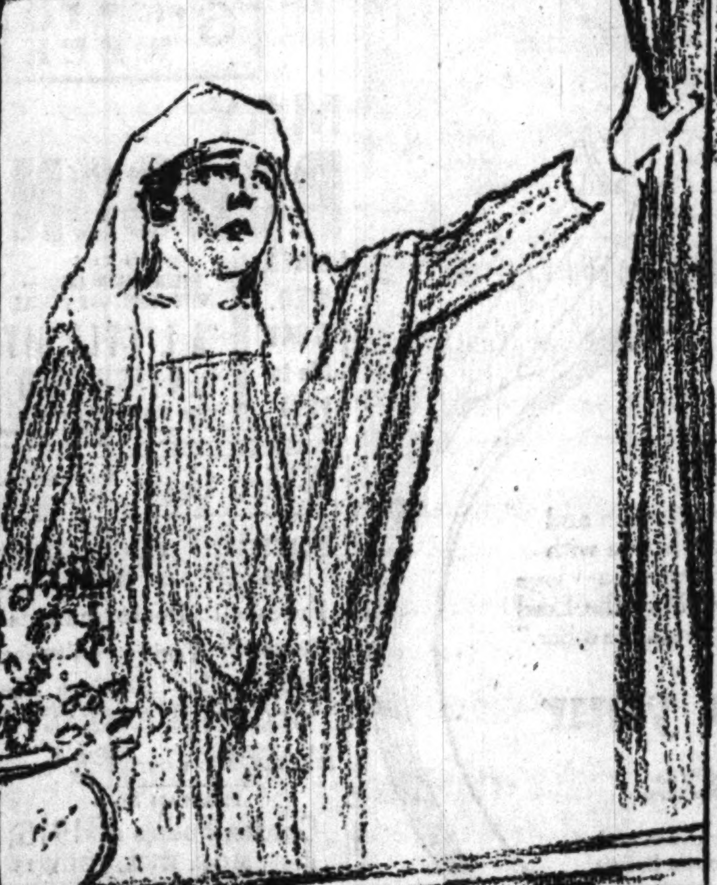
Miss Peddie accuses Mrs. Joe Watts of being pro-German and trying to undermine our morale by saying that Germany is stronger than ever before and likely to hold out indefinitely. Mrs. Watts is somewhat taken aback, being just on the point of accusing Miss Peddie of the same thing. Miss Peddie had just said that Germany could hardly last a month longer, and, argues Mrs. Watts, what can be worse and more seditious than to encourage the sentiment of false security among us?



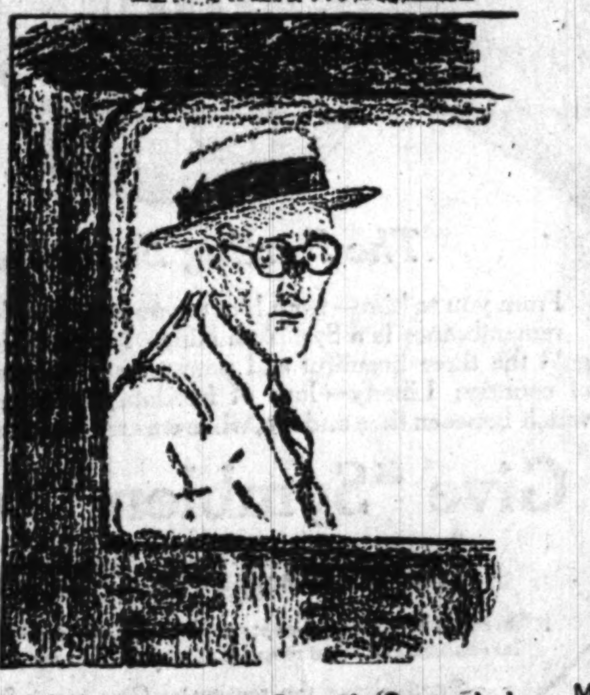
Mr. Wentz, who does those snappy obituaries for the Evening Blat, is dead sure that in five minutes' conversation he could show Creel where he makes his mistakes.



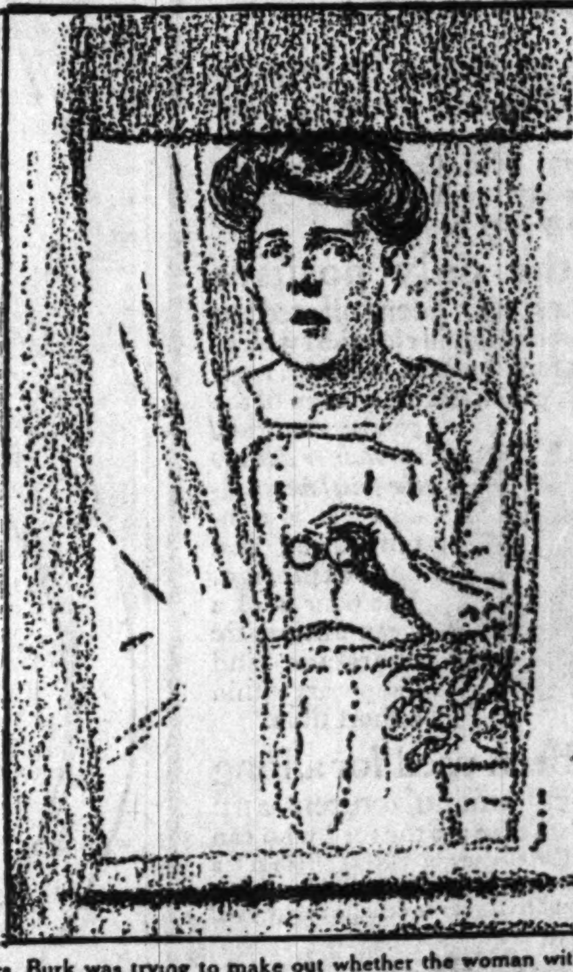
Gladys, the volunteer Red Cross stenographer, wants to know if "Colonel" is spelled "cur" or "ker." Three dictionaries have fallen down on the job and there's no one around to ask but the Finnish scrublady



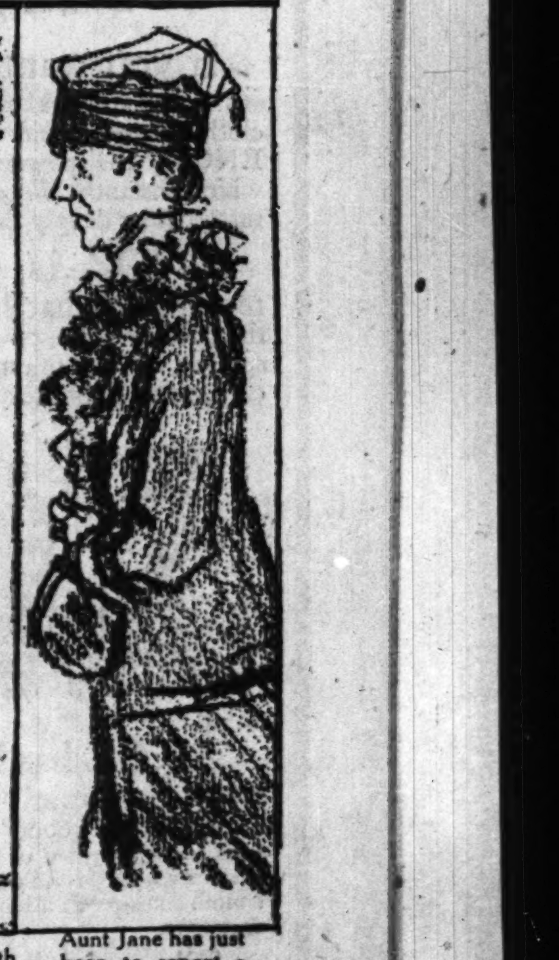
Ethel Faille-Toots, who spent three weeks in the Isle of Wight, after the outbreak of the war in 1914, writes graphically of her experiences under the title "Keeping Up With the Cooties" (published by the author). The picture shows her posed for the frontispiece.



What's the use! Here Percy de Puyster had gone and joined the Secret Service, and had put a neat little "Secret Service" sign right where the kewpie used to be on his machine—and then they made him remove it!



Mrs. Burk was trying to make out whether the woman with the German name across the way was brushing her hair or setting the table when she made the startling discovery that there was painting and papering going on—and if that doesn't show pretty conclusively that a dictagraph or a wireless is being installed then Mrs. Burk's name is mud!



Aunt Jane has just been to report a wireless outfit to the government. It proved to be a government wireless.

clerical capacity and their domestic affairs run the usual uneventful course of the comfortably housed middle class. Their combined incomes make it possible for them to live better and dress better than they could were the husband the sole supporting member of the firm, and the wife has held tenaciously to her job. Recently she has been much worried. She not only has been conscious that the years are piling up, but that she also is putting on the flesh that middle age is heir to. A year ago she heard a rumor that because she was getting heavy her days in the chorus were numbered. To overcome the handicap she immediately began to starve herself and to do a lot of extra dancing. As a result she lost twenty pounds and held her place last winter. This season she started in again with the same feverish anxiety, but in spite of all she could do she knew that the day was not far off when as a chorus girl she would be through. And then came the offer of the stage manager's job to again extend the period of her usefulness.

This girl, assuming that the story has a basis in fact rather than in the fancy of the publicity promoter, has a great opportunity. If she can prove that she has the qualifications necessary, that she is able to keep her charges in line and inspire in them a proper respect for her authority, she should establish a new field of labor for the older chorus girls. As a teacher of dance steps she should prove the superior of the ordinary stage director, for during her varied career she probably has learned them all and created several of her own. She knows those that have proved the most effective in each of the productions with which she has been associated. She should know the chorus lady temperament thoroughly and be able to cope with it, and she should have as keen an eye for the beauty of form and feature and she should have little trouble in learning how to swear.

Florenz Ziegfeld is out with another statement to the effect that, so far as he and the "Follies" are concerned, the New York speculators are beaten. During the first two weeks of the current engagement all seats have been sold at the box office and the house has been filled at every performance. The receipts, says Mr. Ziegfeld, have been several thousand dollars greater than they ever were before for the corresponding two weeks, and that the confidence of the public has been reëstablished in his box office is proved by the fact that not only the best seats but the gallery seats as well have been in constant demand.

So far none of the other local managers has taken his stand with Mr. Ziegfeld, nor intimated his intention to fight with him against the middlemen when the regular season is begun next month. An ordinance has been prepared and approved, based on those recently passed in Chicago and Philadelphia, but whether or not this is acted upon favorably by the board of aldermen will depend upon the attitude of the managers themselves. And there is a prevalent suspicion that they are not particularly keen for its passage.

Waifs of War

By Patrick MacGill

FRANCE.—"We who have journeyed many thousands of miles across the sea to France know that it is our duty not only to fight for the home and the little ones of the generations to come, but also to see that the little tots of today, who have been deprived of the loving comfort and care of parents, are given a start in life. Some of us have children at home, others have little brothers and sisters. We desire in their names to contribute our mite toward making the life of some little orphan at least a bit happier.

"While we realize that nothing we can do can compensate for the loss of parents, we feel that in helping some boy or girl to get a start in life we are but doing our duty. Please adopt for us some child that your committee thinks will not be chosen by any one else. If possible, pick us out a little girl, as all of us realize that a girl has more to contend with in life than a boy, and if the little lady has no name please call her Miss Aero Columbia."

This is a letter recently received by the Stars and Stripes from a squadron of the American air service in France, the men of which desire to adopt a French orphan, and pay for its keep and schooling for a year.

The Stars and Stripes is the official newspaper of the American expeditionary force, and it is published in Paris. Shortly after it was founded it started a scheme for the adoption of war orphans, by companies, groups, or detachments of the A. E. F. The children had either to be orphans, homeless waifs from the invaded districts, or children of French soldiers so seriously crippled in war that they were unable to work for their offspring. The adopting unit could select a child from any of these classes by contributing $100 for its support. Fifty dollars had to be paid upon adoption, and the remainder within four months' time.

All the money contributed would go to the child, and the expenses of administration would be borne by the American Red Cross, which would also determine the disposal of the child and see to its welfare and education. It would be sent to a practical agricultural or trade school or supported in some French family. A photograph and history of each child would be sent to its adopting unit, which would be advised of the child's whereabouts and informed once a month of its progress.

This proposal of the Stars and Stripes is meeting with great success. The soldiers of America were quick to respond, and in two weeks' time they had adopted as protégées thirty-eight French children whose fathers had been killed or permanently disabled in war.

From every corner of France and from nearly every organization came reassuring responses, applications for boys and girls, for a Pierre and a Rene, a Marguerite and a Yvette, for tots driven from home by the invasion of the boche. It is the desire of the noble hearted boys in khaki that the children be sent to school, and some suggest that the children be taken to the States when the war is at an end and given an American education.

All branches of the service are contributing—infantrymen, aviators, machine gunners, and artillerymen. All are willing to do their share towards bettering the life of the little ones who have suffered by the war. The plan has brought a touching response from American sailors. Here is a letter received by the Stars and Stripes a few days ago:

"We, members of a repair division on an American vessel, wish to donate $100 for the support of a French war orphan. . . . Can you arrange so that we can get a boy about 5 years of age and have him live either at —— or ——, so that we can see him occasionally?"

This homely appeal brings back memories of Kentucky and "The Luck of Roaring Camp," but let us hope that the ending of this little romance of war will be far different from that of the story of Bret Harte.

The scheme is becoming a great success, and the American soldiers are responding generously. The unit which has adopted two waifs holds its head very high and hardly deigns to look at the unit which has adopted only one. But the detachment without an orphan or waif is nowhere. It is entirely out of accord with the principle for which it has come across a thousand miles of sea to fight—the preservation of the home.

Kenfield and Cohn:

"Here's a proposition. I have a new act in my trunk. Go down and read it carefully?

"What, the trunk?"

"No, the act. Then come back here and we'll hold a rehearsal. And then I'll take you with me—that is, if you act with credit."

"No, sir. If you want me to act you got to pay me cash."

"That'll be all right. The name of the act is 'Taking Chances.' You'll never have another opportunity like this as long as you live."

"I'm afraid if I go with you I ain't going to live long."

"You'll be as safe as if you were in the trenches."

"That'll help some."

"And now leave me alone, as I have a date with a girl that's a peach."

"I bet she must be a rotten peach."

"You're no judge."

"If I were I'd give you life."

"And then my luck gave out."

"The other day I read a story of a bachelor miser who left a million dollars to charity."

"I wonder why it is that all these misers you read about are bachelors."

"That's simple. Married misers are so common they're not worth writing about."

"This morning I dropped my watch on the floor."

"Did your watch stop?"

"Certainly. Did you think it would go through?"

"Scientists have figured out that in five million years the coast of Cape Cod will be entirely washed away."

"Ye gods! And I have a sister living on Cape Cod!"

"Why not?"

"Yesterday I couldn't get a five dollar bill changed in this whole town."

"Didn't any one have change?"

"Yes, but I didn't have the $5."

"What is war bread?"

"The kind your wife throws at you."

Lucy Gates

Ravinia's two coloratura's will greet each other in passing: Miss Garrison's final performance will be two weeks from tonight; and Miss Gates will sing there for the first time two or three nights later, with "La Traviata," doubtless, as her first opera. Juliet and Martha are other rôles listed for her. She comes this week for rehearsals.

Miss Garrison this week adds two to her répertoire—Rosina, in "The Barber of Seville," tonight, and Lakmé Saturday night. These, with the parts she has sung in the last fortnight—Lucia, Olympia, Antonia, and Gilda—made up her Ravinia contributions for the season.

MATTERS OF MUSIC

CAMPANINI'S list of sopranos for next season now includes the one who thinks it good commerce to be known as Namara. She was, before she hit upon this expedient, Margaret McNamara. Out of the theater, she is the wife of Guy Bolton, who has cut in heavily on the business of Harry B. Smith, Henry Blossom, and Glen Macdonough in fashioning librettos for musical plays.

Other new names in the Chicago Opera's roster are Anne Sullivan and Elvira Amozar, whose employment is, in stage-lingo, general utility.

Cyrena Van Gordon's case has been reconsidered by Campanini; and she's to come back. So is Irene Pavloska, who was replaced in last season's répertoire by Jeska Swartz. Contraltos are scarce. The best of them in opera make little difference at the box office; and not many are good. The Chicago Opera in seven seasons has not owned one so clever and useful as Sophie Braslau, who is out in Ravinia.

Toscha Seidel, whose first Chicago appearance will be with the Orchestra, is not to take part in Miss Kinsolving's series of morning concerts in the Blackstone hotel: he was scheduled for Dec. 17, to share a program with Reinald Werrenrath. He is to give an earlier recital, on Nov. 26, for the Musicians Club of Women.

Wednesday night, from 7:30 to 9 o'clock, a committee of La Chorale Française de Chicago will hear voices in the studio of the director, Charles Lagourge, 616 South Michigan avenue. The chorus is of mixed voices. Those wishing to be heard are instructed to take two songs. Inability to speak or sing in French is not a deterrent: a class in French will be held before each rehearsal. The programs are to be partly in English.

Chamber-music enlists the interests of some of the men in the Great Lakes band, and five of them are to give a concert tomorrow night in Fisk hall, at Sheridan road and the lake shore, under the auspices of the Northwestern university's school of music. They are Helman Felber Jr., a recruit from the Chicago Symphony, and Carl Fruehauer, from the Philadelphia Symphony, violin; Robert Dolejsi, viola; Walter Brauer, cello; and John Doane, piano. Beethoven's first quartet and Wolf-Ferrari's quintet for piano and strings are the principal items in their bill.

Gabrilowitsch is back again as conductor of the Detroit Symphony. He resigned when the musicians' union objected to his importing players from other cities. His point was that he could not find enough good ones in Detroit to make up a decent orchestra. The union gave in: of seventy-six men, thirty-six will be taken in from elsewhere. The trouble is conventional wherever in the United States the work of organizing a big orchestra is undertaken.

When Gabrilowitsch comes next season as soloist with the Chicago Symphony, he will undertake to learn from Mr. Stock what the latter knows about Glière's third symphony, called "Ilia Mouromets." It was new in the Orchestra's répertoire last January, when it was played for the first time in America. It is one of the Russian works brought to Chicago by Mr. Cyrus Hall McCormick, who was a member of the Root commission. Gabrilowitsch is keen to use the symphony in Detroit. It is worth his time.

The union attitude is said to have caused the management of the Boston Symphony to change its intention to unionize that orchestra. Eighteen men qualifying as enemy aliens have been let out, and the places of some given to members of the French band which recently came for a tour of the United States.

John Alden Carpenter is quoted in one of the weeklies, the Musical Courier, as saying that the "music in the army camps will bring great development for future American music—absolutely American: neither Negro nor Indian, but fully American. Americans of the day are only those who lived through a war—the civil war, for instance. The others, who have since that time immigrated to America, are Americans; but their hearts may or may not be American. Through this war, every one here will become truly American; and through the war is to be found that national, conscientious basis of the American school of music."

Emmy Destinn is held by the Germans in her native Bohemia, and not permitted to sing there, because they doubt that she is loyal to the Teutons. Her fiancé, Dinh Gilly, also has been listed by the Germans as a good person to keep in Europe: he was a baritone in the Metropolitan before the war. "As bad as the Germans, save that they have a thin veneer of gentlemanliness," is quoted by a TRIBUNE correspondent as Gilly's opinion of the Austrians. Gilly is an Algerian, with Gallic leanings.

Joseph Urban, whose scenic idiom is become familiar in opera, the musical comedies, and the Follies, was recently arrested as an enemy alien, and released on proving that he had taken out citizenship papers.

Percy Grainger is now an American citizen: his enlisting in the United States army permitted him to get final papers without the statutory delay.

When Walter Damrosch started for France under Y. M. C. A. auspices and H. H. Flagler's bankroll, it was said that he took with him for the entertainment of the soldiers an orchestra of fifty. It turns out that the orchestra he is to direct in the camps and rests is made up of fifty French musicians, organized there.

Ravinia Park's Third Week

THREE operas will be added this week to the season's répertoire in Ravinia park—Rossini's "The Barber of Seville," Massenet's "Manon," and Delibes' "Lakmé"; and there will be repetition of two in the nine so far given—"Tosca" and "The Tales of Hoffmann." "The Barber" and "Lakmé" will be new pieces for Mabel Garrison, who will be heard again in her two rôles in "Hoffmann" also; and Manon will be the seventh rôle in less than three weeks for Claudia Muzio.

The schedule for the week is:

Tonight—"The Barber of Seville," first time, with Miss Garrison, Miss Latham, the Messrs. Harrold, Rothier, Picco, Daddi, Derman, and Mr. Papi. The opera will be sung in three acts.

Tuesday night—"Tosca," second time, with Miss Muzio, the Messrs. Rothier, Kingston, and Mr. Papi.

Wednesday night—"The Tales of Hoffmann," second time, with Miss Garrison (as the doll and as Antonia), Miss Braslau, the Messrs. Rothier, Marr, Daddi, D'Angelo, Salvatore, Sciaretti (as Hoffmann), and Mr. Hageman.

Thursday night—"Manon," first time, with Miss Muzio, the Messrs. Harrold Rothier, Marr, D'Angelo, and Mr. Hageman. The Ravinia version consists of the episodes outside the tavern, in the apartment in Paris, and in the retreat of San Sulpice.

Saturday night—"Lakmé," first time, with the Misses Garrison and Braslau, the Messrs, Harrold, Marr, Rothier, Derman, and Mr. Hageman. The version is in three acts.

The customary Sunday concert in the pavilion will not be given today: instead, the Battalion Band of Great Lakes, more than 300 of the picked men trained in the last year by Lieut. Sousa, will play in the stadium, as part of the program of recreation and sports for the soldiers and sailors.

Concerts by the orchestra under Mr. Hageman will be given tomorrow and Friday nights. Mr. Picco and Alexander Zukovsky, next in rank to Harry Weisbach in the violins of the Chicago Symphony, will be the Monday soloists; and Miss Braslau and Mr. Steindel will contribute to Friday night's bill.

Afternoon concerts will be Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. Georgene Faulkner will, in an interlude in Thursday's bill, tell Red Cross stories for the children. Janet Linn Cobb, violinist, and Mabel Lyons, pianist, will contribute to the program for Friday afternoon.

DOING A WORTH WHILE JOB.

By Mae Tinée.

REFERRING to the little old cloud with its silver lining and Lieut. William C. Howett:

He — the lieutenant — big, blonde, and wearing civilian dress, came into the office the other day with news that should prove a veritable boon to drafted men (lining) and has been made possible only through an unfortunate happening to the lieutenant himself (cloud). Now for the whole story, after having roused your curiosity by our mysteriousness:

Lieut. Howett was busily engaged in training men at Camp Grant when one day his eyes were injured. So, nothing to do but for Lieut. Howett to accept his honorable discharge from the army and prepare for about a three months' vacation until the injured eyes should have recovered.

"I made up my mind to go to the north woods, and was just about packed," the lieutenant said, "when a friend put a bee in my bonnet.

"'You're worrying about being laid on the shelf,' he said. 'Well, there's no need of that. In the three months you have before you you can do the greatest kind of service for your country. Teach the men who are going into the camps just how to go about it!'"

That's what he's going to do. He is to lecture for twenty minutes in the various picture theaters of the city, issuing instructions to the drafted man. After the lecture, for five or ten minutes he will answer questions which may be propounded by the men themselves or their relatives. The raw recruit will be told clearly just how to conduct himself when reporting to the draft board. He will learn about insurance and allotments; what kind of cars he will ride in; what the bugle calls mean; what to take with him when leaving home; when and for how long he may visit and receive visitors; about physical examinations, drills, beneficiaries, mail, salutes, duties of noncommissioned officers—well, just about everything that has been puzzling him.

Lieut. Howett began his lectures on Friday at the Lane Court theater. He will make the rounds of the Ascher houses. Later he will probably appear by special engagement. bit by just putting them wise a little! the government a great deal of trouble that would be eliminated had they been instructed before entering camp just how to proceed. Let them do their bit by making an effort to hear Lieut. Howett, so anxious to contribute his bit by just putting them wise a litite!

Not saying "I told you so," or anything like that, but Fox has decided to put Theda in a comedy. It will be entitled "The Little She Devil." There is nobody who can be more comical than this famous vampire.

One of the historic spots photographed for D. W. Griffith's coming picture, "The Great Love," was a country place at one time the favorite resort of King Edward VII. In the back of an arbor is a tree planted by the emperor of Germany while on a visit there long before the war. The tablet which commemorates the occasion of the planting is buried at its roots—but the tree still lives and blooms.

Ella Hall has been engaged to support Fred Stone in the Artcraft picture, "Under the Top," owing to the illness of Wanda Hawley. Well, all one can do is hope.

Pearl White's on a vacation. Doing what? Doing nothing—on a farm. She has just completed the twenty episodes that compose "The House of Hate," and we'll say we bet she needs a rest!

Ask Me! Ask Me!

BIG BOY: No, of course you can't enlist if you're not any older than you say you are. Don't worry—your time will come. In the meantime, read all you can and brush up in every way you can think of on army tactics, etc. And see that you've a good sound body. Indeed, I do recommend "Pershing's Crusaders." Rupert Julian in "The Kaiser" is the man you are thinking of. You're welcome.

INQUIRER: Theda Bara is still with Fox. She has been taking a rest, they tell me. Mona Lisa never had a chance to Monalise, as Balboa had some financial difficulties and closed up just as she was on the verge of revealing her mysterious self to the movie world.

Celebrate French 'Fourth' on City's Lake Front Today

By Mme. X.

VIVE la France! The custodian of some of the finest fruits of civilization, our earliest friend in the court of nations, and whose courage and fortitude today shine like a white flame out on a darkened world. Never, while spoken or written word endures, will the heroism of the French people in the defense of French soil be forgotten.

The presence here in Chicago of the celebrated French aviators, Lieuts. Farré and Flachaire, gives especial point to a celebration of the 14th of July (France's independence day) which the American fund for French wounded is organizing for this afternoon on the east side of Grant park. There will be flag raising, troop reviews, martial music, and—weather permitting—a flight in a French airplane by Lieut. Flachaire.

The first call of every visiting Frenchman is made to the headquarters of the A. F. F. W. at 60 East Washington street, where Mrs. Russell Tyson, Mrs. Benjamin Carpenter, and their many faithful coadjutors are to be found at their posts every day except Sunday.

Lunch With Visiting Aviators.

The executive committee of this organization was the guest last Wednesday of the Association of Commerce at a luncheon the latter gave at the Hotel La Salle in honor of the visiting aviators, Lieuts. Farré and Flachaire.

Mrs. M. M. Townley sang the "Marseillaise," many speeches were made, including one in excellent English from Lieut. Flachaire.

Besides those already mentioned the following members of Mrs. Tyson's committee were present: Mesdames Hugh McBirney, Hale Holden, George Holleck Taylor, George S. Payson, William Prescott Hunt, Hamilton McCormick, Keith Spalding, W. E. Clark, George F. Brown Jr., and George R. Deane and the Misses Marie Josephine Rozet and Mabel Dick.

Dedicate New Pavilion.

Included in the ceremonies this afternoon at Grant park will be the dedication of the pavilion for soldiers and sailors, on the site chosen for this enterprise just east of the Illinois Central tracks and north of Van Buren street viaduct. Tomorrow the building of the structure begins and completion is promised within twenty-five days.

Mrs. James Keeley, chairman of the Chicago hostess committee for the war recreations board, is the originator and prime mover in this enterprise, aided and abetted thereto by John Richards of the south park board.

The recent match between the Cleveland baseball team and our own White Sox at Comiskey park netted nearly $15,000 for this Grant park pavilion, which promises to be a most attractive and valuable adjunct to the war recreations board's work. The plans for the building are drawn by the south park board's architect (whose name I'm sorry not to know), with Arthur Heun as consulting architect. Mrs. John Carpenter is to undertake the interior decorations, while the south park gardeners are to supply the outside shrubberies and flower gardens, which promise to be quite a feature of the undertaking.

On Boston Common.

Is it the shade of the late Montgomery Ward that has hovered so many years over Grant park and kept it from being developed and utilized in these strenuous war times? In Boston the Common—that historic park in the heart of the city—is now the setting for innumerable war byproducts. It is dotted with little white cottages with latticed porches, which cottages shelter Red Cross, Infant Welfare, food productions, and Knights of Columbus workers. There is a model chicken house and yard with a fine brood of Brahmas stalking about. Around the cottages and inclosed by white picket fences are many neat, little war gardens. A recruiting stand, with a huge torpedo lying beside it, gives the note of war.

Here khaki clad soldiers, white uniformed sailors, and kilted Highlanders address the constant throngs who fill the park, urging enlistment and national service. It would be valuable in more ways than one if Grant park could be so exploited.

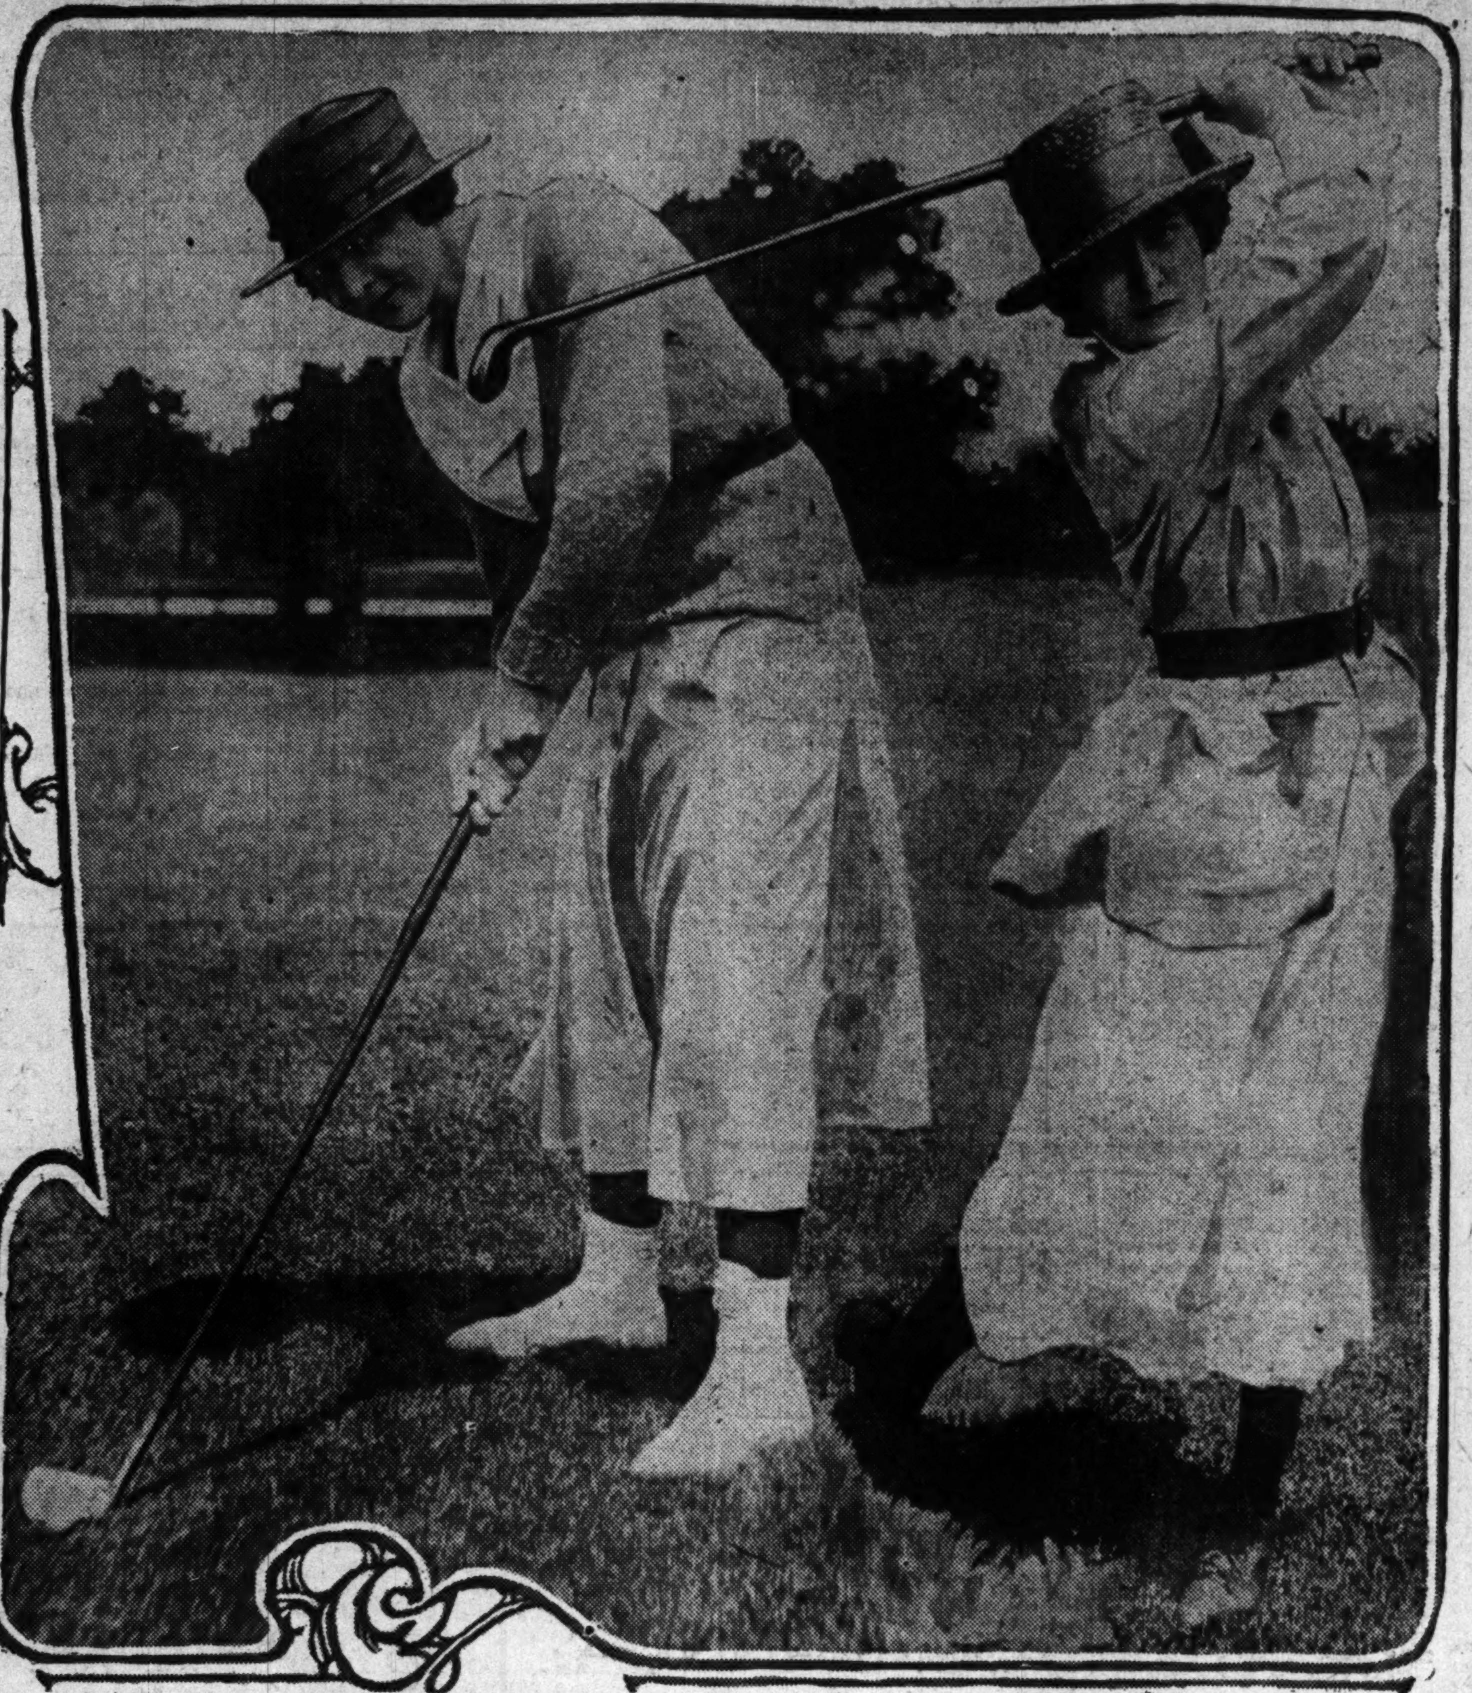
Liberty Loan Workers Meet.

Tomorrow at the Blackstone hotel opens a convention of the twelve federal reserve chairmen and the forty-eight state chairmen of the national woman's Liberty loan committee, with Mrs. McAdoo presiding. Mrs. Antoinette Funk, Mrs. George Bass, and Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank will each conduct a department of the conference, which will last four days.

Keeping in Trim for War Relief Work.



Miss Edith Cummings—Miss Katherine E. Ingalls.

Miss Edith Cummings, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Mark Cummings, and Miss Katherine E. Ingalls, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Ingalls, are two of the most enthusiastic and best women golfers at the Onwentsia club. Although they are both active in various kinds of war relief work they manage to find time for exercise on the links, and every Tuesday, which is ladies' day at Onwentsia, they are among those who "come early and play late." Both of them are members of the Onwentsia team which last Monday won the second of the series of five matches that are being played for the trophy presented by Mrs. Hathaway Watson of Indian Hill. The other members of the Onwentsia team are Mrs. Mason Phelps, Mrs. Frank Wilhelm, Mrs. Earle H. Reynolds, and Mrs. James O. Hinkley.

Miss Mary Isabel Curtis

Miss Mary Isabel Curtis of 1031 East Fiftieth street has charge of the surgical dressings department of the College club for the summer. The clubrooms are open daily for all kinds of Red Cross work. Girls home from various colleges are invited to do their war work here.

The work of the women in the three Liberty loan drives has been a revelation to men engaged in these national enterprises. Each time the women have far overshot the mark set for them in getting subscriptions, until now the men eagerly solicit their active coöperation on an equal footing.

Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank's activities are many, varied, and valuable. She has recently taken on two new ones. She has accepted the chairmanship of the entertainment committee of Mrs. Keeley's board of hostesses, which means that she undertakes to provide the soldiers and sailors in town Sundays with professional entertainers from the various theaters open during the summer. The members of the dramatic profession are the most generous givers of their time and talents to any patriotic enterprise.

Aiding Destitute Poles.

Besides this undertaking and her work on the Liberty loan committee, and her magnum opus, the lying-in hospital, Mrs. Fairbank has lately allied herself with that small band of valiant women working with Mrs. John Smulski to raise money for the destitute families of Chicago Poles who have gone to war.

Paderewski, the greatest of modern Poles, has organized in this country an army of 20,000 of his compatriots for overseas service. As they wished to go as a Polish unit—a natural wish for a race continually struggling against great odds to preserve its nationality—they couldn't go in our training camps, but our government permitted them to establish a training camp under French officers near Niagara Falls. There is another similar camp in Canada, organized nearly three years ago.

As these Poles are taken into the French army they receive French pay—3 cents a day—and no pension in case of death or maiming. For the most part they are recruited from our poorest alien population. They make fine soldiers, and it is up to us Americans to look after their families during their term of service and to provide for the wives and children of men who give their lives for the freedom of the world. That daily band of voluntary recruits who march so gallantly through our downtown streets should touch the hearts—and the pockets—of us all.

Tires for Targets.

Mrs. Fairbank had an experience recently of a somewhat disturbing nature. She was driving her husband and three children to a ship launching in South Chicago.

As they were merrily running along a populous street of that district, a short, sharp explosion made Mrs. Fairbank exclaim, "There goes a tire!" and when, a minute later, as another machine passed them, there was another loud report, she remarked "Their tire is 'busted' too."

But when she took her crippled car to a nearby garage they found that it was two revolver shots which had exploded, not only one of the tires in use, but an entirely new one carried at the back of her machine.

It seems that such revolver practice on passing automobiles is a favorite sport with the young bloods of South Chicago, and that the gentle admonitions of the local police have so far failed to discourage them. It's a pity such vandals can't be placed where their love of destruction and their markmanship could be turned to the service of the nation.

One of the thrills of last week among the friends of the Samuel T. Chases and the George M. Reynolds was the narrow escape of Miss Elizabeth Chase and Miss Reynolds, when the latter's motor engine stalled on the St. Paul tracks near Libertyville, as a sturdy freight train bore down on them.

Unable to rouse the sluggish machine, both girls jumped from the car just in time to avoid being smashed with it, as the heavy train tore through it.

Being a composed young person, Miss Reynolds wasted no time on lamentations, merely saying, as she turned away from the blazing wreckage: "I hope it's insured."

War's Grim Realities.

How little we over here in our busy, sheltered lives get in touch with war's grim realities! Flashes of it come to us in letters from our friends who have gone to Europe to do war work. Among these is Miss Margaret Payson, George S. Payson's only sister, who is one of those best fitted by temperament and physique for the tremendous strain which really well done work over there necessitates. Her letters give vivid glimpses of the horror and anguish on one hand and of heroic succor on the other. She writes in a recent screed:

> I take off my hat to the Red Cross canteen work. It's wonderful! They meet, feed, and doctor thousands [of the refugees] daily, and it's terribly needed. Just now Paris is packed with them, and such sights!
> Yesterday I saw a girl of 20 who had been caught by the Huns a year ago, outraged, her face so cut to pieces she had no nose, no lips—her face one mass of seared flesh. Her fingers were stumps, only her thumbs left, and she was tending a family of seven children and her grandfather—94. An idiot boy of 20—Boche work—was made blissful by the candy I fed him—his dangling arms and mutilated fingers no use. . . .
> Yesterday I took an hour to do what I like best—meet a train of blessés [wounded], and give them cigarets . . . and the contentment of those smokey faces! . . . One poilu had only his mouth visible, but his two companions—one with one leg, one with no arms—told him I was coming, and it was open!

Of the dangers of life in Paris she makes light:

> You get so used to "Bertha" and the raids and are so busy that there is no fear. When the raid is a bad one and I hear bombs dropping I go down to the first floor. Friday night there was a fight overhead and our skylight was smashed by shrapnel. When I heard the glass crash I though the Hun had dropped a bomb and my hour had struck.
> We certainly arrived in Paris at an exciting time, but the Hun will not take Paris while there is a Frenchman alive. The spirit is wonderful—you hear no complaints, not a waver, anywhere, and every one is to see this thing through and the Huns licked to the dust.
> I saw Balfour and Beatty on Thursday, and the latter is quite as much of a winner as he looked in the papers and is much bigger than I thought.

Fewer Men Servants.

In view of the many prophecies as to the coming scarcity of man power for domestic uses, and the even more ominous rise in the price of gasoline, this may be the last summer of comfort for the owners of luxurious automobiles.

Already many a sturdy and trusted man has been called from the service of the rich to that of the nation. It is far from easy to replace these by men of a similar experience. Here's the tale of the great lady and the new chauffeur. The former, at the end of a visit to a north shore hostess, pressed a generous tip into the new chauffeur's hand and, when he looked surprised and without understanding of this ceremony, she hurriedly said:

"It's for you—you buy some cigars for me."

"Yes, ma'am," was the response. "What kind do you smoke?"

Personally I rather admire a human being so simple, so far removed from the complexities of fashionable life as not to know a tip when he felt it. The custom of tipping is one of the worst barnacles on our ship of state. As Shakespeare would say, were he here today, "It falls alike on the just and on the unjust; it curseth him who gives and him who receives."

So difficult is the question of labor becoming that the owners of big country places are already planning to let their lovely, close shaven lawns to go grass next summer, and their gay, well kept flower gardens go to seed until such time as swords are turned to plowshares and bayonets to pruning hooks. They overlook the growing land army of women, whose recruits will be especially fitted for just such work.

Already bright harbingers of this movement, two young society women, Miss Dorothy Keeley and Miss Sylvia Shaw, offer themselves at so much per hour, to cut Lake Forest grass and to weed Lake Forest flower beds, intending to devote the money so earned to war charities.

Aside from their undoubted efficiency they will be decidedly ornamental features in any garden. Instead of the freckle faced, perspiring, odoriferous garden boy, a pink and white garden girl, in a fresh and dainty frock and wearing a becoming shade hat, would be a distinct improvement in any landscape.

Hasten the day when these modern Maud Mullers are an accepted fact! When that time arrives, think what a to do among our judiciary when come the summer days!

NEWS OF THE CHICAGO WOMEN'S CLUBS

Trying to Make Better Citizens of Foreign Born

By Mrs. Edward W. Bemis.

[Chairman of the Americanization committee of the woman's committee, State Council of Defense.]

The fundamental work of the Americanization committee of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense is to conduct an Americanization program which shall unite the aims and ideals of both native and foreign born for a better American citizenship and shall awaken in our foreign born residents a desire for naturalization and for the speech of their adopted country.

The department is planning a brief survey of the state to determine the present foreign born population of the 102 counties, the leading nationalities and occupations, and the number who have been naturalized since the naturalization law of 1906 went into effect. A chairman will be appointed for each county. This data will make a foundation for effectual work.

An institute will be held of not more than two weeks' duration, either in August or in September, to be attended by state and city chairmen, committee members, and those willing to be workers and speakers.

Lectures will be given by specially qualified speakers on the true purpose of American democracy, our reasons for being at war, and our civic duties and responsibilities for a unified citizenship. Instruction will be given in wise and efficient methods of presenting Americanization work.

It is hoped that many will qualify to do valuable work. Those who speak more than one language will be urged to attend, as well as those who speak only English.

The citizenship class of the Woman's City club, coöperating with its Americanization committee, is having a series of demonstrations of the gifts of our foreign born citizens to America, presenting their reasons for seeking homes and citizenship here, and demonstrating their arts, crafts and native foods of conservation value. Armenia, Belgium and Croatia have already help us to discover that, while the sons of all fight at the front in a common cause, their fathers and mothers in America can and must become a unified American people.

This work has become coöperative with the Americanization committee of the Council of Defense.

Next Tuesday a study class will be held at the Woman's City club on "China: Her Possibilities." On Tuesday, July 23, in the auditorium of the State Council of Defense, Chinese women and children will present native Chinese foods, patriotic music, arts, and crafts.

Meanwhile, the food conservation department is uniting with us to publish for each foreign language group in turn its tested recipes. These leaflets, published in both the native and the English language, will be of value both as food and Americanization lessons.

The Americanization committee is just entering upon its duties, and pledges and bespeaks hearty coöperation with and from all organizations doing Americanization work.

WOMEN IN WAR WORK.

Until the new recreation pavilion in Grant park for soldiers and sailors, which was formally dedicated yesterday, is finished, the Sunday entertainment for the boys will be given in some theater. The Studebaker has been chosen for the first one, which will take place next Sunday.

Sergt. Young of the marine service will speak at a meeting of the national bureau for the advancement of patriotism at 803 Masonic temple tomorrow afternoon.

The department of instruction in surgical dressings of the Chicago chapter, American Red Cross, has moved from 601 Tower building to 414 Garland building, 58 East Washington street.

Illinois, which was given a quota of 939 nurses to be enrolled by Jan. 1, has so far signed up only 322 with the central division of the American Red Cross, leaving a total of 617 which must be recruited before the first of the year. The central division bulletin urges the nurses to come forward to perform their large share in the winning of this war. "The campaign, to be as successful as we feel obligated to make it, must be continued vigorously and persistently throughout the balance of the year," says the bulletin.

How the Chicago chapter of the American Red Cross is caring for its doctors and enlisted men and nurses abroad, what those nurses are doing, and the great need for more is told in a letter received by John W. Champion from Maj. Dean D. Lewis, directing surgeon of base hospital unit No. 13, now in France. Maj. Lewis writes:

> After much traveling we have reached our final destination in a good sized city situated in a beautiful section of the country. The hospital isn't quite ready for occupancy, but should soon be. The enlisted men are working and they are doing well, both in the speed with which they put up buildings and the way it is done. We shall all be happy when we get to work.
> Forty-four nurses already have been detached and sent to another part of France for work. They were needed badly, but I hope that they will be returned to us, for we are to have a 1,550 bed hospital. Twenty-eight more of the nurses are working with hospital No. 24, which is from New Orleans, and some other nurses are working at night in a refugee camp.
> We appreciate much the efforts of the Red Cross here. The American Red Cross is certainly doing everything possible to add to the comforts of the enlisted men. It even furnishes them with real doughnuts. It is amazing to see how doughnuts cheer them up.

Russell Tyson of Chicago has charge of the work in this division. He is enthusiastic about his assignment and is doing fine work.

Miss Florence Schee of the employment department of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense, which has its rooms at 228 Monadnock building, writes that she has many situations for women. "We want seven or eight strong women to go on farms to do real work—hoeing, shocking wheat, and spraying trees, and some who will help with the washing and ironing," writes Miss Schee. "And the need for girls in munition factories is also urgent."

Owing to the curtailed quotas, the International Federation of Catholic alumnæ, Red Cross auxiliary 356, announces the following hours to be observed: Daily except Saturday from 11 until 5:30; Monday and Thursday evenings until 9 o'clock, at the Red Cross shop, 20 East Jackson boulevard.

The increasing volume of work of the Red Cross chapter's home service section among the families of soldiers and sailors has shown the necessity for a complete card index catalogue of all men who have been inducted into service from the territory over which the Chicago chapter has jurisdiction. It is believed that through the assistance of a large volunteer force, the Red Cross can compile this valuable and highly necessary list. It is estimated that there will be at least 150,000 names on the cards. School teachers who are vacationing just now are being called upon by the chapter's service bureau to spend a part of their holiday period in this work. The compilation will be under the direction of Miss Jeanette Appleton, one of our public school teachers. Teachers who wish to enter this form of Red Cross service should apply to the service bureau at chapter headquarters, 511, 58 East Washington street.

Wendell Phillips lay nursery, 2009 Walnut street, will be the scene tomorrow afternoon of a home coming. The nursery is for colored children, and the women of the neighborhood and the contributors to the fund for the nursery are invited to come. The party will be from 3 until 5 o'clock.

Mending of every kind can now be done at the mending shop which is conducted at Room 309 Venetian building, 15 East Washington street. The work is a branch of the employment bureau of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense, where women who can sew and who are unable, through some present inability or economic situation, to take other work, can earn money. The news has been welcome to bachelors with buttons off, to business women and those busy all day in war relief work, who have no time to do their mending. Undergarments are made here, and special embroidery.

At the headquarters of the Do Without club the newest protégé of the Woman's committee of the Council of National Defense, 120 West Adams street, the desks are snowed white with letters from men and women whose interest has been captured by the thought of giving up some small personal indulgence and letting the dimes, nickles, and quarters so saved turn themselves into war saving stamps, or cigarets for soldiers, or food and drink for some wee French orphan, or a record or two for the boys at camp. "I am quite a smoker. I'll do without cigars for one day per week and give the money to the tobacco fund," writes a patriotic traveling man from somewhere on the road, while another letter forswears tobacco for an entire month. "I have been doing without a great many thing in order to help Uncle Sam," runs another letter. "I think now I will do without silk stockings for the duration of the war."

But perhaps the most sweeping pledge of all is that of the earnest woman whose letter reads: "Starting today, I am willing to do without meats, candy, ice cream, and picture shows for a whole year." Those who want to join this rapidly swelling army should send a 10 cent membership fee to the Do Without club, 120 West Adams street, and receive the red, white, and blue membership button, with printed suggestions for members.

Word has come from the farm at Libertyville, which is a branch of the woman's land army of the State Council of Defense, that the forty-four girls who are enrolled from all parts of the country are making records in farming and dairy work under the direction of Miss Blanche A. Corwin of the Cornell agricultural college. W. V. B. Ames of Libertyville donated the farm for the duration of the war. It is supported by the returns from its dairy products and by voluntary contibutions.

Hostesses at the community cannery now being conducted at Sinai social center will be for this week the members of the war service committee of Johannah lodge. The cannery is open on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 10 until 12 o'clock and from 2 until 4 o'clock. Women are admitted free, and those bringing their own jars and fruits or vegetables may do their canning under the supervision of an expert domestic science demonstrator.

Women chemists are needed by the government and to stabilize the industries by replacing men chemists who have been called into service, according to Capt. Frederick E. Breithut of the chemical service section of the army. This call is so urgent that he has asked the woman's committee of the Council of National Defense to coöperate with the army medical department in making a census of all the available women chemists in the country.

The house to house canvass by ward chairmen and precinct captains in behalf of the salvage bureau of the Red Cross for the benefit of the home service department of the Chicago chapter is on in full force. The following women are in charge of their respective wards:

First—Mrs. Edwin Gresham.
Second—Mrs. Annette D. Fitch.
Third—Mrs. Stella Raphael and Mrs. Forchner.
Fifth—Mrs. Edward R. Litsinger.
Sixth—Mrs. H. F. Rockwell.

Thirty-fifth—Mrs. Roma Kline.

Marquis Eaton will present a large silk Red Cross honor banner to the ward chairman who brings in the largest number of signed pledges from Chicago housewives agreeing to sell their junk and waste materials only in exchange for Red Cross coupons for the duration of the war. A meeting of ward chairmen will be held tomorrow at 3 p. m. at 703 Garland building.

The Girls' Patriotic Service league hike for today will start at 3 p. m. in Thatcher's woods. Miss Margaret S. Bridge of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense will lead. Take an Oak Park "L" to Wisconsin avenue, then change to a Lake street car to Thatcher avenue.

Mrs. James V. Watson, field secretary of the food for France fund, will organize the Negroes of the state during the next few weeks in behalf of the emergency and personal work which is being carried on among the sick and wounded civilians and refugees or France and the allied countries through the bureau of public health in Paris. A general meeting will be called for this purpose early this week in the rooms of the information headquarters, 434 First National Bank building.

The record for last week's attendance at the food conservation bureau and demonstration station, 28 South Wabash avenue, is over 1,000 visitors every day. The work of conducting free demonstrations of recipes indorsed by the United States food administration will continue for the duration of the war at the shop, which is directed by Mrs. Charles A. Munroe. There one may find definite and complete information about menu making as Uncle Sam would advise it, about war gardening, and about cooking in the widest variety of its aspects. The following is the calendar for this week at the station:

Monday—11 a. m. and 2 p. m.: "Canning," Miss Winifred Philleo.
Tuesday—11 a. m. and 2 p. m.: "Economy Utensils," Mrs. Helen Ruggles.
Wednesday—11 a. m. and 2 p. m.: "Saving Wheat," Miss Ethel Lendrum.
Thursday—11 a. m. and 2 p. m.: "Summer Cookery," Mrs. Helen Ruggles.
Friday—11 a. m. and 2 p. m.: "Saving Wheat," Mrs. Helen Ruggles and Miss Mildred Taber.
Saturday—Demonstration of quick breads, etc.

The adage "The watched pot never boils," does not hold true about the melting pot the South Shore Country club war savings workers have established at 14 North Michigan avenue. This particular pot is watched carefully by two dozen or more patriotic women, and it is boiling for the good of the cause. An expert appraiser is there every day to weigh all metals which are put into the pot and test them and fix their price, which is then turned over to their owners in war savings stamps.

There is to be a conference of the national Liberty loan committee at the Blackstone hotel on July 15 to 18, inclusive. Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank is to be in charge of the local arrangements and among a group of out of town delegates to the convention will be Mrs. Frank A. Vanderlip and Mrs. Guilford Dudley. Fifty-two delegates are expected and among the prominent women who are to be here for the sessions will be Mrs. Helen Ring Robinson of Denver, Mrs. John W. Mariner of Milwaukee, Mrs. Louis L. Emmerson and Mrs. Howard T. Willson of Springfield, Ill.; Miss Florence G. Edwards of New York, Miss Helen Bovee of Detroit, and Miss Virgila Stephens, who is office director of the national Liberty loan committee.

The class will be addressed by a Chinese student from the University of Chicago. On Thursday at 3 p. m. the schools committee will meet.

Benefit Concert for War Orphans; News and Gossip

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[Special Correspondence.]—Washington, when it is once really aroused, does nothing half way. Remember the way it arose to the cause Italian after it had been convinced that it was lagging behind shamefully in contributions for the relief of that country beneath the blue, blue skies and by the bluer sea. A dozen different reliefs wound up with the splendid concert at Poli's last month when Caruso and Frances Alda came down from New York for the occasion.

And now the case at hand is much the same, and this week saw the remarkably fine concert at the Belasco on Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock for the benefit of Roumanian war orphans. We have had benefits and charities for almost every imaginable cause here, but the Roumanians have been neglected. Therefore, once was this fact recognized and felt, immediately came results.

His royal highness, Prince Carol, the crown prince of Roumania, is the honorary president of this recently established organization for Roumanian help, and Miss Margaret Wilson is patroness for the American end of it. Among the Washington members of the committee which assisted are Mrs. Delos Blodgett, Mrs. Herbert Hoover, Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, and Mrs. Charles Sheppard. Mrs. Theodore V. Boynton is the chairman, and the Princess Ghika and Mrs. John Allan Dougherty the honorary secretaries.

There are something over 20,000 homeless orphans in Roumania. And they have been working hard, these children. Many of them refused to be taken prisoners, retreating with their school masters into those parts of the country not invaded by the enemy and plunging bravely into the hardest kind of farm work to do their share towards feeding the soldiers.

Singers Please Big Audience.

For a cause like this it is no wonder that Washington turned out in full force. Margarita Sylva never sang more beautifully, not even in the first days of her flushed successes in Paris at the Opera Comique, when love lent its wings to the soft notes of her voice and she won not only the praise of all Paris, but the passionate devotion of the man who is now her husband, Capt. Bernard Smith, U. S. M. C.

Margarita was born a Belgian. It was only a few years ago that she met Capt. Smith for the first time. He was then an attaché to the American embassy in Paris. Now he is in Paris again on special business for the navy department.

While she was in Washington Mme. Sylva was entertained by the Boyntons, residing at their home as their guest. After the concert Maj. Teiusanu, that handsomest of Roumanian officers who lost an arm on the battlefield and has been decorated and redecorated with medals and who is now attached to the Roumanian legation here, entertained at dinner in her honor.

Paul Bleyden, the tenor of the occasion, is a Washingtonian. Lieut. Stoica sang Roumanian national airs and folk songs to an audience that grew more and more enthusiastic as the concert progressed.

The French and Italian embassies were present and, while the president and Mrs. Wilson did not attend, Miss Margaret Wilson and Miss Bones were there. Mrs. Theodore Boynton had a box, and among the guests were Miss Justine Townsend of New York and Gen. Claudon of the French army. A number of prominent Chicagoans were present at the concert.

At Summer Resorts.

If you have a mind for statistics you will recall that during the summer of the Spanish-American war cottages at the summer resorts on the seasides and in the mountains were lamentably unfrequented. Now, even though we are entering on the second summer of our actual participation in the war, there has been no sign of slackening in the attendance. Around Washington a 10 per cent decrease has been noted, but that is only the natural result of so many Washingtonians being kept right here on the job. New England coast resorts continue well in the lead, while the fashionable population of Long Island sound and South Hampton, Bar Harbor, and the New Jersey coast remains about the same.

Right now it is the older members of the families who seem to be going away for the summer, flitting frivolously about at the resorts while the younger ones stay at home.

There is Mme. Langlais, who was Amy Bennet. She and her husband have come back to town and will stay at the Bennet home while Mrs. Bennet is traveling in Maine and Mr. Bennet, leaving the home at the disposal of the newlyweds, is satisfying himself with the Army and Navy club. And there is Frances Moore, who also chose her husband from the French high commission and is now Mme. Marquisan. She will spend the summer in the big Witchfield house in Massachusetts avenue.

Hallie Davis did plan to settle here—she's Mrs. George Perry now—but she changed her mind later and went to Quantico, as originally planned before her marriage, so that she can be with her husband, who is stationed there until he has to go over.

Spend Week Ends in the Country.

Official Washington stayed at home over the Fourth—an unprecedented Fourth in official Washington's history—but how they did scatter for the week end! Hardly a hamlet or countryside or country residence within 100 miles of Washington but was the scene of gay and hospitable entertaining.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Crane III. rarely spend their week ends away from their charming home in Maplewood, near Falls Church. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Hurtle, who came from Chicago several years ago and who have made themselves much liked in Washington and their home a coveted place to visit, do considerable entertaining week ends at their historic country place, "Gunston hall."

Formerly the home of George Mason, it is a delightful old place with its terraced rose gardens and the opportunities it affords the guests of slipping back for a hundred years or more into the first days of our country's birth. It was from here that George Mason and George Washington would go to the old church, and you can still sit on the hard old pews, which are just as they were in the pre-revolutionary days.

Mr. and Mrs. Hurtle are leaving soon for a motor trip througs the Berkshire hills.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Ruddock usually give week end parties, too, at their "Curles Neck farm," which is on the James river, near Richmond, where their family has lived for generations. Places on the river famed for their historic interest are being largely frequented now. Robert Crain at Mount Victoria has a home of nearly forty rooms and every imaginable luxury to add to the quaintness and charm of the place, and the "Woodlawn," built in 1805 and occupied by Nellie Custis in those bygone days, has been remodeled and is now occupied by Miss Elizabeth Sharp.

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.

Chicago Churches to Observe Great Holiday of France

BY THE REV. W. B. NORTON.

THE anniversary of the fall of the Bastile in France will be observed today in Chicago churches, especially in the Protestant Episcopal churches. Because this anniversary fell on Sunday general civic celebrations were held yesterday.

Probably the most elaborate of today's programs will be given at St. James' church, Cass and Huron streets, of which the Rev. James S. Stone is rector. M. A. Barthelmy, the French consul; Dr. C. Vermeren, representing Belgium; Horace Nugent, C. M. G., English consul; and D. d'Allagno, vice consul of Italy, will take part in the procession, which will be semi-military in character, displaying the flags of all the allies.

The special speakers will be M. Barthelmy and the Rev. Dr. Samuel N. Watson, rector emeritus of Holy Trinity church, Paris, France.

Dr. Watson and Mrs. Watson were in Paris at the outbreak of the war. He served as chairman of the American ambulance committee for the first seven months and chairman of the war relief clearing house until the organization was replaced by the Red Cross. Dr. Watson is a chevalier of the Legion of Honor and his wife has been awarded the medaille de reconnaissance Française, King Alfred of Belgium also bestowed on Dr. Watson the cross of the chevalier of the Order of King Leopold and on Mrs. Watson the medaille of Queen Elizabeth.

Special services in commemoration of the fall of the Bastile will also be held at Trinity church, Twenty-sixth street and Michigan avenue, and in Calvary church, Kedzie avenue and Monroe street. In Calvary church the rector, the Rev. H. R. Neely, will speak on "The Soul of France."

The following request was sent to the 600 churches which are members of the Chicago Church federation, signed by the Rev. Herbert L. Willett, president, and the Rev. W. B. Millard, secretary: "France, our ancient ally, is bound the closer to us as the Stars and Stripes fly side by side with the tri-color in the trenches of the present war. As the Fourth of July is more and more celebrated by our Gallic allies so it is fitting that the great French liberty day, July 14, the anniversary of the fall of the Bastile, be appropriately observed in the United States. We therefore request Sunday be observed in all of our churches as liberty day by displaying the French flag with our own, rendering the Marseillaise, and by such other recognition as seems fitting."

The national committee of the northern Baptist laymen announces its drive for a $1,000,000 war emergency fund is now complete and will be met in full if the pledges reported are paid.

The Rev. Ernest Fremont Tittle

Dr. Ernest Fremont Tittle is the newly appointed pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church, Evanston, one of the largest and most commanding churches of the denomination. He succeeds Dr. Timothy Prescott Frost, who retired last October after having served the Evanston church fourteen years. Since that time the church has been ministered to by two of the professors of Garrett Biblical institute, Prof. Harris F. Rall and Prof. Lynn Harold Hough. This interim service was rendered in order to make it possible to secure Dr. Tittle for the pastorate.

Up to June 1 Dr. Tittle was pastor of the Broadway Methodist Episcopal church, Columbus, O. On June 1 he became pastor of the First church, Evanston, but will not enter on his active pastorate there until Dec. 1, as he has gone to France in army Y. M. C. A. work. He has gone, however, as the representative of the Evanston and not of the Columbus church.

Dr. Tittle is 32 years old. He is a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan university of Delaware, O., and Drew Theological seminary of Madison, N. J. He was pastor in Delaware, O., before his appointment to Columbus.

Mrs. Tittle is a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan university and served two years as assistant state secretary of the Young Woman's Christian association for Ohio Colleges.

Before going to France Dr. Tittle served as religious work director of the army Y. M. C. A. at Camp Sheridan, Ala. Dr. Tittle's success in influencing young men was said by Prof. Hough to have been one of the chief reasons for Dr. Tittle's choice for the pastorate of the Evanston church, which is in close affiliation with Northwestern university.

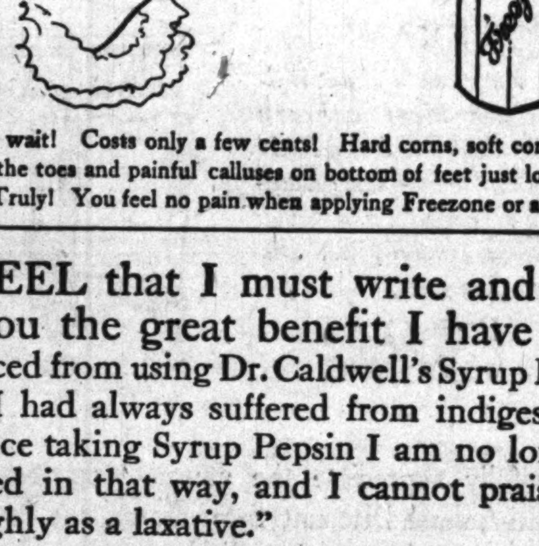
LIFT OFF CORNS!

With the fingers! No pain at all! Drop a little "Freezone" on a sore, tender corn or a callus. Instantly that corn or callus stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without pain, soreness or irritation. Yes, magic!



Why wait! Costs only a few cents! Hard corns, soft corns, corns between the toes and painful calluses on bottom of feet just loosen and fall off. Truly! You feel no pain when applying Freezone or afterward.

FUTURE EVENTS

Some of the most interesting and charming visitors that Chicago has entertained in many a day, and we have numerous ones here, are the French aviators, who are daily speaking of their experiences in the sky at the Art institute, where the exhibition of aerial paintings and moving pictures opened last Friday. These pictures are the official records of the French government of aerial warfare over the western front. The visitors are Lieut. Henri Farré, the painter of the canvases now hanging in the Art institute galleries, and Lieut. Georges Flachaire.

The committee in general charge of the exhibitions, which will continue daily from 11 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock in the evening, Sundays included, until July 31, is headed by Mrs. Russell Tyson, who is assisted by Mrs. Benjamin Carpenter, Mrs. George F. Brown Jr., Mrs. Keith Spalding, Miss Marie J. Rozet, Mrs. William E. Clarke, and Mrs. M. M. Townley. Each day of the exhibition will be in charge of a separate reception committee, with the following schedule for this week:

Today, the stage women's war relief, Mrs. E. R. Fifield, chairman; tomorrow, the Winnetka branch of the American Fund for French Wounded, Mrs. Lyman T. Walker, chairman; Tuesday, the Kankakee branch of the American Fund for French Wounded, Mrs. E. B. Gower, chairman; Wednesday, the Lake Forest branch of the A. F. F. W., Mrs. Edward Hasler, chairman; Thursday, the Evanston branch of the A. F. F. W., Mrs. James A. Patten, chairman; Friday, Le Cercle Français, Mrs. M. M. Townley, chairman; Saturday, the Kalamazoo branch of the A. F. F. W. and the Junior league, Miss Katharine Pierce, chairman; next Sunday, members of the woman's committee, State Council of Defense.

The proceeds of the exhibitions will go to the children of French aviators killed in the war and to the American Fund for French Wounded.

The South Shore Country club will celebrate French Independence day today with a program of events which is expected to bring a crowd of representatives of many nations to the clubhouse and grounds during the afternoon and evening. At 6 o'clock Lieut. Georges Flachaire, the "ace of French aces," who has been decorated with the Legion of Honor, the war cross with seven palms, the British cross, and the cross of war, will fly over the grounds, performing nose spins and other difficult feats, and later will tell of his experiences in bringing down twelve German planes. Addresses will also be given by M. Antonin Barthelemy, the French consul, and Lieut. Henri Farré. Two of the latter's best paintings will be exhibited in the clubhouse tonight. And as a further attraction Lieut. Dobelle will sing a number of French trench songs and the "Marseillaise" during the evening.

There will be a musical tea at the Birchwood Country club this evening, starting at 5:30 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Gustav Heller of 4904 Vincennes avenue are giving a reception this afternoon for their daughter, Cora, whose engagement to Gene Herz was recently announced.

The girls will go out on the morning train and take the evening train back to town. Mr. and Mrs. Junkin will also entertain the choir boys of Trinity church while they are on their annual encampment at Delavan lake.

There will be a lawn party at the Kenwood club on Thursday, July 25. The Red Cross auxiliary of the club is working on Mondays, Wednesday, Thursdays, and Saturdays, under the direction of Mrs. C. C. Paddleford.

Elaborate plans are being made for the lawn fête to be given on Saturday, July 27, by the national defense committee of the Chicago chapter of the D. A. R., at the Lake Forest residence of Mrs. Franklin Smith. Mrs. Arthur Chase Dow is chairman of the committee and is assisted by Mrs. Frank R. Leight, vice chairman of the finance committee, are coöperating with Mrs. Dow and her assistants in arranging the fête. Many beautiful articles have been donated to be sold and also auctioned. Among the things which will be auctioned by a prominent movie star are an autographed handkerchief donated by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and an autographed card by President Wilson. Any one wishing to give anything to the fête may send her donation to Mrs. Arthur Chase Dow, care of Mrs. Franklin Smith, Lake Forest.

The office girls of Armour & Co. will repeat the pageant, "Women of the Ages," which they recently gave on the estate of Mr. and Mrs. J. Ogden Armour in Lake Forest, at the Auditorium theater on Saturday night, July 27, for the benefit of the Salvation Army war fund. The production is under the direction of Miss Lillian Fitch, Mrs. Anne T. Whitney, and Arthur Heun. Mrs. Robert Dunham will have charge of the girls who will sell flowers, and Mrs. A. Watson Armour will be at the head of the corps of ushers. Miss Lolita Armour will be chairman of the program salesgirls and will have some of her friends and also some of the girls from the office on her committee. The ushers will be members of the Girls' Marching club of the Armour office force. The boxes for the pageant will be auctioned by Howard Gillette within a short time.

Offers Opportunities Never Before Equaled

EVERY broken line and odd lot, and practically every individual high price piece of merchandise we have in stock is being closed out regardless of cost.

The big reductions mean a great saving now, but their importance will be even more appreciated this Fall when it is discovered that it is impossible to duplicate many of the articles presented in this sale—and that others are commanding double these prices. The style-qualities of this merchandise are such that they promise to be good indefinitely.

In every way this is the most important Clearance Sale we have ever held—do not miss this opportunity.

It is necessary to approve this advertisement at an early hour, while the sale is in progress. If some of the items listed here should be sold when this advertisement appears, a great many other equally strong values will be found. These lists are but samples of the offerings.

McVICKER'S.

Goldie and Mack:

"My brother has joined the silent majority."

"Dead?"

"No, married."

"I saw your father in the restaurant today and I'm glad he doesn't eat pie with his knife the way he used to."

"That's because I bribed the waiter to put soap on his knife."

"Last night I dreamed I tumbled off a cliff and while I was falling everybody I owed money to appeared before me."

"Everybody?"

"Yes, everybody."

"You must have fallen an awful distance."

"What animal approaches nearest to man?"

"The flea."

"Ever hear the story of the two men?"

"No, what is it?"

"He-he."

"What made you quit your job?"

"The firm insulted me."

"How?"

"Took my name off the payroll."

"The other day I ate a piece of mince pie and an hour later everything was swimming before me."

"Indigestion?"

"No, I visited an aquarium."

RIALTO.

Fred Rogers: Man's life is a game of cards. First it is "cribbage." Next he tries to "go it alone" at a sort of "cut, shuffle, and deal" pace. Then he "raises" the "deuce," when his mother "takes a hand in," and, contrary to Hoyle, "beats the little joker with her five." Then with his "diamonds" he wins "the queen of hearts." Tired of playing a "lone hand," he expresses a desire to "assist" his fair "partner," "throws out his cards," and the clergyman takes a $10 bill out of him on a "pair." She "orders him up" to build the fires. Like a "knave," he joins the "clubs," where he sometimes keeps "straight," but more often comes home "flush." He grows old and "bluff," sees a "deal" of trouble, and when at last he "shuffles" off this mortal coil and "passes in his checks" he is "raked in" by a "spade," and life's fitful "game" is ended, and no matter what sort of "hand" he held Gabriel with his horn will "trump it."

Nat Goodwin says that women are changeable. But that's not true. I've been trying to change my old woman for years. And what a fool I made of myself during our courtship days! I used to lay her little head upon my shoulder and call her baby mine. Until the white began to rub off. Then I called her kalsomine. Although she told me her complexion was genuine. Well, I guess it was because it said on the lid of the box, "None genuine without the signature," and there was the signature, right enough.

One night as we were standing at the garden gate her mother put her head out of the window and said, "Eczema, what are you doing out there?" Eczema said, "I'm looking at the moon." Her mother answered, "You tell the moon to go home and you come into the house."

It takes a mother twenty-one years to make a man of her son. And it takes another woman just twenty-one minutes to make a boob of the same man.

And that brings us to the question, "What is love?" According to that eminent authority on the subject, Ella Fillyer Pillbox, love is a little sighing, a little crying, and a whole lot of lying. On the other hand, scientists assert that love is a softening of the heart. But I claim that love is nothing more or less than a softening of the head.

For instance, there's the love a dog has for a man. Only, of course, when a dog jumps up on a man's lap it's a cinch that he isn't going to ask him for a sealskin coat the next minute. There's also the love that a cockroach feels toward a man for saving his life and then, as a mark of gratitude he fills his house full of cockroaches.

McVICKER'S.

Elliott and Moro:

"My brother swallowed a box of cartridges this morning."

"I hope later reports will be favorable."

"Is that cigar offensive to you?"

"No, I work in a livery stable."

"There's a post card for you downstairs."

"Open it and see what's inside."

"Have you got card feet?"

"Certainly not."

"Then stop shuffling them."

"Did you have any trouble catching the train?"

"No, indeed; it stood still and let me walk right up to it."

"Have you any close friends who have money."

"All my friends who have money are close."

"Did your brother die a natural death?"

"No, we had a doctor."

"Tomorrow is my wife's birthday and I want to buy her a useful present."

"Why not buy her a broom?"

"What for?"

"To sweep up the floor with."

"She uses me for that."

"I'm saddest when I sing."

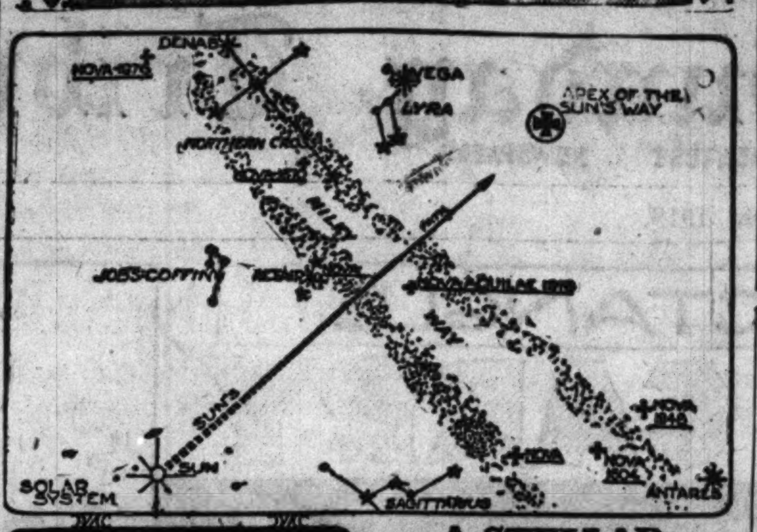
"So is the whole neighborhood."

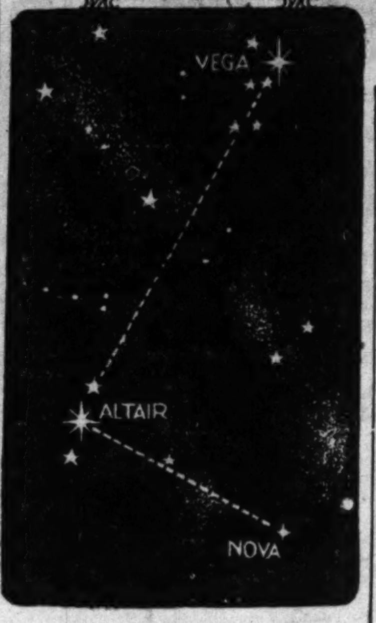
"I caught our cook this morning straining the coffee through one of my socks."

"And did you discharge her?"

"No; she didn't use a clean one."

ASTRONOMY





A STELLAR GRAVEYARD

DRAWN BY S. K. MAXWELL

STELLAR GRAVEYARDS.

THE expanse of the milky way between Deneb and Scorpio is a veritable stellar graveyard. Within the last 300 years five great suns have gone to their destruction within its boundaries, as well as a probable host of lesser stars which never become visible except on photographic plates.

This part of the sky is known as the "coal sack" region. The milky way divides into two streams at the head of the northern cross, and the double stream southward is filled with knots of stars, star fields, and great black starless spaces. True gaseous nebulæ are found here, glowing with a faint green light, while occasional dark "rifts" reveal the shapes of the absorbing dark clouds in front of them.

The dark areas are, in fact, great swarms of dark bodies. It often happens, as events are measured among the stars, that a living sun crashes into one of these clouds and when the light from the conflagration reaches the earth, a score or more of centuries later, we say that a new star has appeared.

When the invading sun is large and the swarm small, there is a chance that the star may escape total destruction. This was the case with the new star which is shining in Aquila. It often happens, however, that the star is completely reduced, and its dust is scattered out in a wake through the destroying swarm.

The sun and its family of planets is traveling across space toward a point not far from Vega. There will come a time in future ages when the earth will be quite near the dark star fields, but unless their extent is much greater than is at present apparent, we will pass by them on the west and the sun will escape the fate of stars which strike the swarm.

SLAMS OF LIFE.

By J. P. McEvoy.

LINES TO A STRAW HAT.

O straw chapeau of argent sheen,
How wondrously you grace my bean!
How softly, sweetly you exude
A noble pristine pulchritude!
And aureole of charm superb,
That knocks my neighbor off the curb.

A coruscating kelly, you,
A thatch of luminiferous hue,
A thing of beauty for my phiz,
A haloed charm, that's what you is,
A crown of flame, a glowing lux,
And all of this for just two bucks!

I weep to think that soon will fade
The charms in which you're now arrayed,
That on your frame so soon will browse
A herd of milk and lactic cows.
But life is hail and then adieu
For all of us, and so for you.
So I will wear you while you're new,
Que voulez-vous!

ART by Eleanor Jewett

Masterpieces from Kimball Gallery at Art Institute

IN Room 27 of the Art institute is hung now a group of paintings by celebrated artists, lent from the private collection of Mrs. W. W. Kimball. On the end wall is a magnificent marine, "Dutch Fishing Boats," by Turner. Over a rough sea the little vessels toss on the crest of the waves, beatinf into the wind with all sail set. A spirit of mad laughter pervades the scene from the black clouds scudding through a blacker sky to the swelling sails puffed by the wind to bursting, and the gayly dressed figures that cling to the deck rails in tune to the dancing motion of the boat beneath their feet.

Possibly the most beautiful of the several beautiful portraits in the room is that of Mrs. Wolff, painted by Sir Thomas Lawrence. She is dressed in a white satin gown with a rose at her belt, and on her head, concealing the glory of her chestnut hair, is a jeweled turban, the head dress so much affected at that time by the ladies of the court. A book lies open before her on the cushioned reading desk, and she leans her elbow on it, her head resting on her hand. But the thought of serious reading does not connect itself readily with that gracious figure. Rather is this a pose conceived in the mind of the painter and exquisitely endured by Mrs. Wolff.

The painting of Lady Sarah Bunbury by Sir Joshua Reynolds is a beautiful, almost dramatic portrait. "Lady Francis Russell," by Romney is a sympathetic rendering of a tenderly lovely creature. The portrait of the Countess of Bristol by Gainsborough is stunning. Not a whit of the autocrat has been detracted from this living likeness of that grande dame. One other portrait should be considered. Rembrandt's painting of his father is remarkable in its attention to detail and for its sense of values.

"The Guardian of the Flock" by Millet shows a peasant girl leaning against a cock of new mown hay with her knitting needles clicking busily as she works and dreams, with her woolly charges browsing at their pleasure around her feet. The landscape by Hobbema is dark in color set off by the mounted cavalier in the foreground. Corot, Ruysdael, Gainsborough—who occasionally swerved from the painting of women, and not always to as great a delight of his audience—and Richard Wilson are represented too in their depictions of woodlands, open meadow, or running streams.

Not of his own he painted,
But the pictures of other men
Garnered throughout the ages
He wove into paint again.
Rubens and Tintoretto,
Van Dyck and Velasqueth, too,
With their women of cream, and men of brawn,
And their skies of Venetian blue—
All he sought in their beauty,
Keeping the Painter's trail—
Down through the dark of the ages,
A Galahad's second Grail.

J. Carroll Beckwith spent a goodly part of his career as a painter in copying the masterpieces of the European art galleries. There is hung now in the first hall of the new wing of the Art institute a collection of his copies. They are lent by Mrs. Beckwith.

One among them is an original. This is the quaint portrait of two little girls, "The Orphans," dressed in gray with high black belts and sturdy shoes, their yellow curls brushing their shoulders. In this canvas may be seen the effect on the artist of his years of painting from pictures. From the precision of detail and proportioning of interest, from the solemn children's faces to the evenly adjusted folds of the drapery back of them, each consideration is given due weight with a formality of touch and color that was more accustomed in the days of the Stuarts than in these modern times of gay, laughing, living portrait youngsters.

Among the copies are "Anthony and Cleopatra" by Tiepolo; "Don Baltazar on Horseback"—that chubby little knight on his roly-poly, bouncing pony—by Velasqueth; "Madame Adelaide of France," by Nattier, with her puffed and powdered hair, delicate coloring, and flowing blue ribbons; "Adoration of the Magi," by Rubens, and other successful paintings from Franz Hals, Van Dyck, Veronese, and Tintoretto, not to mention the full list, for Mr. Beckwith was an insatiable worker. It is well for us that he was, for now the originals are locked away from the world, and his beautiful reminders of them are helpful in keeping before us the true meaning of the best in art.

Passing through this gallery the rooms on either hand are hung, the one with paintings from the private collections of Charles L. Hutchinson and C. Bal Lihme and the other with pictures lent by Paul Schulze. Beyond these rooms is another long gallery where old and modern masters lent by Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Hall McCormick are installed. Further again come the two rooms where are paintings given to the Art institute during the period of 1911-1918 by the Friends of American Art.

Miss Lola Taylor in "Doing Our Bit" Palace

ALL HIS OWN FAULT

By Guy F. Lee.

The kais sat alone in his regal chair,
Bidding adieu to his royal junk;
He jangled his sword with a petulant air
And mused his last on divine right bunk.
Straggly his mustache, in past up-furled;
Muffled his voice, once roarful; mum
His lips whose brags once claimed the world;
A down-and-outer, a self-seen bum.
Then out of his pent-up gloom he cried:
"Donner und blitzen! Ich hab' kein show!"
Well, if he'd asked me, dern his hide,
I could have told him that, years ago.

The kais, with an oath, hurled his iron cross
And missed the cat by a bare half inch.
"Dumm kopf! Und I denk der earth to boss,
Und vunce it ge-seemed a ge-lead pipe skinch!
For vy did von Turpentine sink nix ships?
For vy did dot klown prinz schtop nit Yank?
For vy did dose schweinhunds gimme der schlips?
For vy, and verdammdt, and for blank, blink, blank!"
Then they led him away, and he realized
That kidding one's self doesn't make it so.
And if he'd seen me, to be advised,
I could have told him that, years ago!

They Laugh at this in Vaudeville

RIALTO.

Lawrence Johnson:

Last summer, while the thermometer hovered around 90 degrees and walking behind a fat woman was the only shady spot that one could find, I met Judge Brown on Main street. As he was wiping the perspiration from his face, I said to him, "In this weather, judge, you want plenty of sharp iced drinks. Did you ever try gin and ginger ale mixed?"

"No," said the judge," "but I've tried several fellows who have."

"And there was the case of Pat O'Toole, who became delirious from sunstroke. The doctor, calling next morning, asked his wife how Pat was getting on.

"Fine," said Mrs. O'Toole. "During the night he asked several times for water."

"Ahem!" said the doctor; "still flighty."

Another time O'Toole fell down an elevator shaft, and at the hospital they kept him alive for eight days on brandy and milk.

"Just my luck," said O'Toole afterward, "I was unconscious the whole time."

I have a sister that used to teach Sunday school, and one day she was horrified to see two of her pupils, Billy and Jimmie, fighting on the street. After she separated them she saw that Jimmie had a bloody nose, so she said to Billy, "I think you ought to apologize to Jimmie."

"Huh!" said Billy, "I ain't agoin' to apologize for no accident."

"Accident! Why, Billy, how can you call it an accident? Didn't you intend to hit Jimmie on the nose?"

"No, ma'am," said Billy, "I didn't. I swung for his eye."

One thing we must concede to children—at least they're honest in their emotions. A few minutes ago I saw a little boy in tears, and when I asked him the reason he said, "Boohoo, Johnnie Jones has moved away."

I said, "And were you so fond of your playmate?"

He said, "Naw, but he was de only kid on de block I could lick."

A little further on I saw another small boy also in tears, so I also asked him what was the matter.

"O-O-O!" he wailed, "pa and ma won't take me to the moving picture show tonight."

I said: "Don't make such a noise. Do they ever take you when you cry like that?"

He said: "Sometimes they do an' sometimes they don't, but it ain't no trouble to yell."

RIALTO.

Wilkins and Wilkins:

"You were a queer one even at school; always at the bottom of the class."

"That didn't make any difference; they taught the same at both ends."

"Do you recall the handsome lady teacher?"

"Indeed I do."

"Remember the time she said she would kiss the boy who was first at school next morning?"

"Of course I remember."

"I was there at 8 the next morning."

"When you went to school did you take algebra?"

"I was exposed to it, but I never took it."

"Remember my sister?"

"Of course, I do."

"You always said she was so dovelike."

"No, I didn't; I said she was pigeon toed."

"Somehow or other my sister never cared very much for you."

"Well, I never cared very much for her, either, ever since the time I sent her a pig for a birthday present."

"Didn't she send you a note of thanks?"

"Yes; she said: 'Many thanks for the pig; it is just like you.'"

"You also had a sister, I believe."

"Yes; she married a cornet player named Burst."

"Any children?"

"Three children—Alice May Burst, John Wood Burst, and Henry Will Burst."

"Troubles never come singly."

"Now you've said something. Last week my wife presented me with twins."

"Boys?"

"All except one."

"What are you calling them?"

"Everything under the sun."

Just suppose my plugs had fouled!

—Stephen Decatur.

DEMOCRACY AND INCOMPETENCE.

The requirements of American government in the readjustment of the methods of democracy will be determined considerably in their fulfillment by the wisdom of the American electorate. We are convinced that democratic government cannot operate as it has been doing in this country. The disposition of a people to lapse from a condition of enforced tense effort to one of permitted laxness is revealed often enough, but we doubt that circumstances will permit a general letdown.

Certainly whether it is permitted or not, one of the possible benefits of making a great war for the stability of democracy would be lost if the nation did not make permanent for peace times the efficiency demanded in war times.

War removes part of the instinctive fear of a democracy for competence. There is this inherent fear expressed in politics and revealed in government operation. People politically fear competence when it is offered them. They fear expert knowledge and specialized talent. The instinct is one of dread that the particular talent developed by one man will be used against the mass if power be added to talent.

This is revealed constantly in politics. To it can be attributed most of the success of the political buncombe which puts incompetent men in office. Political popularity, vote getting ability, depends frequently upon the ability of a candidate to convince the people that he has no particular talent for the office he seeks, and for that very reason is the safest man to have it. If he had ability he might use it for himself. If he has none he will only misuse his power to the disadvantage of everybody.

War breaks down some of this popular aversion to competence because people in danger look to the best leaders they can see and competence more and more asserts itself in the emergency. This turning towards competence may not be a conscious movement in political action, but we can see much of it.

The United States has drawn into its activities the men needed in emergency—Schwab, Stettinius, Ryan, Goethals, etc. If Schwab in peace times were a candidate for an office administering steel fabrication for the government his very ability to conduct such an office would make the people fear his purpose in seeking it.

War gives a new standard of competence in government affairs by creating an imperative demand for efficiency. Some of that new standard can be preserved even after the apparent pressure has been removed. At least it is worth while to make the effort.

This effort demands as its first requirement that the burden upon the voter's information when he enters the polls be lightened. He cannot undertake, out of any information regarding candidates he can reasonably be expected to possess, to pick the good men out of a great mass of candidates for a multiplicity of offices.

Such offices as are better filled by appointment and as can be filled without impairing administrative responsibility to the electorate should be eliminated from the ballot.

By restricting the field in which the voter's intelligence is required to operate to the smallest area possible without impairment of substantial responsibility, the ability of the voter to act wisely is increased. His real power is thus increased and not diminished. He has no real power if ignorance guides him. The casting of a ballot is a bit of the political mechanics which as easily hurts an electorate as it protects one. The voters can turn their ballots against themselves as easily as they can turn them against their enemies.

To bring the demands of an election within the probabilities of voting intelligence the short ballot is recommended as a needed reform. It will so simplify elections, by reducing the number of elective offices, that it will be more nearly possible for a citizen to determine whether he is voting for effective government or bad government.

The fear of competence which the war is dissipating will not be banished and the short ballot will not in itself remove such an instinct, but at the time when war is breaking it down it is advisable to collect all the gains possible and to hold as many of them as possible.

Illinois may obtain the short ballot only through the decision of a constitutional convention and the decision of the people to accept the new constitution. The opportunity to decide that a constitutional convention shall be called will be presented in the November election. Active, aggressive campaigning for the necessary vote probably will not be begun for some weeks, but it is important to attract the voters' attention to this issue and to hold it if possible.

SOLDIER TASTE AND COMMON SENSE.

The admonitions, the "don'ts," given the players who will entertain the American soldiers in France are exceptionally significant not only because of the fine perception which they reveal of military intelligence and good taste and good sense, but because by perceiving these qualities they will cause other people to recognize their existence.

In the very finest fashion soldier taste and sense are thus indicated as superior to civilian. The vaudeville performers who go to the soldier theaters in France are to omit, as unbecoming, unnecessary, and ungracious, the very emotional appeals which delight the civilian here in the United States the most.

The performers are warned to omit the "can the kaiser" hokum. The soldiers have respect for the fighting qualities of their opponents. They know that if what ought to happen to the kaiser happens to him it will be because of soldierly effort and will not result from applause in the theater. They know that Fritz will not be licked by being belittled. It is possible to detest German military theories and practices and yet have a real regard for Fritz's qualities of discipline and endurance. Civilian emotions do not count for much with men dealing with realities.

The performers also are warned not to lay on the molasses of devotion to nation and humanity. The soldiers are devoting themselves. They do not care for civilian talk about devotion. Warning also is given against the hideous but laughed at jokes against wives and matrimony. Womanhood is idealized by the men who are in service. They do not see many women and the women they see are for the most part engaged in a service of benevolence.

Censorship operating upon theatrical performances for the soldier acts for good taste and common sense, for appreciation of real values in life and for intelligence. Entertainment is permitted to be gross and banal for civilians, but the soldier, who invents impossible profanities and who lives in impossible discomfort, has sanctuary which he does not want invaded by the carnalities and grotesqueries of fat civilian life where an emotion unexpressed in any uncomfortable act may result in the egotistic glow necessary to a cheap consciousness of heroism.

ARE WE LEARNING THE LESSON?

"War today is industry. The manufacturer as well as the strategist is determining the issues. Even courage itself is not the only important element, because military discipline can instill the necessary courage by wholesale, even in the ordinarily timorous, while the most valorous of troops are powerless if without the material for combat as we have come to know it. Given enough men to operate the tools of warfare, the question of victory then becomes merely a question of supplies. If you have the preponderance of materials you win—there can be no other outcome."

This is an overstatement which leaves out some essentials, but it contains truths very important for Americans to grasp. For years we have ignored them, but they have been coming home during the last fourteen months of frenzied activity. Modern war cannot be waged by a heroic citizenry which seizes the ancestral firelock at the midnight summons of a Paul Revere and goes forth to win immortality on the village common. Modern war is industry, industry on the vastest scale, industry planned and prepared, its dies already made, its stores reserved, its men trained.

Do these sound like truisms today? Will any one not a fanatic deny them after fourteen months of war?

Readers of TRIBUNE editorials are very familiar with them. They were familiar with them before we entered the war, and before the war began. To us even in the midst of peace—interminable peace it was, we were told by the pacifists—these truths seemed self-evident, and we believe our good TRIBUNE readers agreed with us. But not congress, not the president, not enough of either party leaders to count, and not the mass of the American press and public. All over the land the pacifists were telling us that preparation for war meant going to war. Societies of anxious humanitarians were warning the people that the militarists would get us if we didn't watch out. Congressmen, with pitifully few exceptions, were either indifferent or misinformed. The press was not even half awake. This condition persisted into the war period in spite of the staggering warnings of the cataclysm in Europe. Mr. Wilson's memorable message of December, 1914, was a seemingly deliberate and powerfully influential check to the whole campaign for preparedness, and throughout the months of complications with Mexico and with the German government, the administration's negative stubbornly blocked the road. Pacifist influence held sway in Washington and held well up to the threshold of war, although in 1916, at the height of the Mexican crisis, some preliminary and partial legislation was won.

The nation went to war in blissful ignorance of the truisms we have quoted at the beginning of this editorial. Since then we have had fourteen months of education, and today we have these words spoken by no less an official than the Hon. William Bauchop Wilson, secretary of labor, who, we are quite confident, would have been one of the last to give such views his approval or adherence in 1916 or before.

"Times change, and men change with them," and we are far from minded to taunt any discoverer of the important truths of national defense we preached so long in the fat days of peace and fallacious security to the indifferent ears of our fellow countrymen. All the same, in welcoming their awakening to the obvious, we send up our prayers for a continuance of light and a retention of wisdom after the flail of grim necessity has been hung up by destiny and we have returned to the ways of peace. Let us then remember, and let us act upon our experience rather than upon our comfortable hopes and prejudices. The cannon will be silent and the excited voice of the incurable pacifist will be heard again in the land. Let us not forget then what we know now. Let us remember and keep the gate.

Editorial of the Day

A GLORIOUS "FOURTH."

[From the Toronto Mail and Empire.]

For the great republic whose national holiday it is, the Fourth of July, 1918, will be scarcely less worthy of remembrance than the Fourth of July, 1776. While the earlier date marks the rending of the bond between the mother country and her mighty offspring of the North American colonies and the setting up of the United States as an independent power, the later date marks the coming together in the cause of world liberty of the two arcs of the broken ring of Anglo-Saxon unity. The British empire and the United States of America are still distinct, but they are no longer apart. In the great issues of world politics they could not have been more of one mind today if they had still been of one political household, and if the national spirit and the national ideals and the international policy of each remain as they are today the two powers must go on side by side in their beneficent course throughout the ages.

A FOOD RESERVE.

[From the Prairie Farmer.]

We are going to have a big crop of barley this year. We will have enough wheat so that a comparatively small part of the barley crop will be needed for human food. The brewing demand is limited, and may be cut out entirely.

In the natural course of events most of this barley would be used for feeding livestock. It would be a wise move for the government to prevent this by buying up a large portion of the crop and holding it as a food reserve. There is small chance that next year's wheat crop will be as good as this. It may be very much smaller.

We have learned something of the value of barley as a bread crop. A hundred million bushels of this year's crop held as a reserve would be splendid insurance against a crop failure next year.

TO CHECK THE ENEMY.

If he sends the hat check boys to the war Gen. Crowder should have a monument in Longacre square.—New York Sun.

COMING HOME

BY PRIVATE PEAT.

THERE were a goodly number of the boys gathered on deck as we pulled out from Liverpool docks. I was sorry and sad. I had landed at another port in England long months before. I had fought, bled, faced death, had nearly surrendered to the sweep of his giant sickle. I was crippled, a maimed being for life. I had landed a light hearted boy; I was leaving, still with the God given gift of optimism and good spirits, but a man of serious thought and more serious purpose. I was glad to leave, but more glad that I had come. Perhaps liberty was a half point the nearer for each pint of heart's blood the soil of France had soaked into her laboring bosom.

The boys aboard were a mixed bunch. We had a sprinkling of one-leggers, tapping about on temporary crutches. They would not get their new legs until they had been home a little while. We had a number of "one wingers." I was one myself, though the wing still hung to the shoulder. I came in the shot up lung class, too, and I had the added "distinction" of gas. We were a pretty sight, but we could laugh at ourselves and at each other, and that was a mighty share of the battle.

They gave us lifebelts and we walked in those, talked, ate, slept in them. The enemy—we are fighting Germans—have a natural predilection for hounding the helpless.

Our chief amusement was looking for periscopes. Not a day passed that half a dozen of us did not sight a sub apiece. We attended lifeboat drill, we compared experiences, we showed photos to each other of the girls—60 per cent of the unmarried First Canadians have married old country girls since 1914—we played cards, we talked of home and of what we were hoping to do, and then under the shadow of the snowy cliffs of Newfoundland we got our first real "sub" scare.

It was going on toward noon and most of us who could move about were on deck. Fore and aft were the ship's guns, shrouded and silent all the passage. Under the gun shelters groups of shell shock boys had made themselves what almost amounted to a headquarters. No one disputed their right to preemption. Some of these boys were bent in two and trembled continually as with ague, some had actually become crazed. They were most pitiable. The war may bring a man the most ghastly of scars, but he should thank the Almighty when he emerges with whole and sound mentality. Suddenly, as noon struck, the gun aft fired a few rounds rapidly. We sprang to attention, then rushed to the rail.

"A sub—at last a sub." And then we had to laugh. Piling first into the lifeboats were the shell shock boys. The noise of the gun explosion cured some of them, some it made worse. After all it was only firing at icebergs which threatened the trade route.

Halifax, then Quebec, where at the time the main discharge depot was in being. We hung about there several days and tasted of the hospitality of many persons in the city.

At last came the final medical inspection for discharge. I came last on the list, and so it was that I saw the results of many examinations.

The doctors are strict, though absolutely just and fair, but few malingerers get by. Like any other army, the Canadians have had a few of that ilk. There were two chaps who had planned and carried into execution a "getting away" turn from the trenches. One developed severe shell shock, the other had become totally deaf.

The shell shock lad was a terrible case. The worst I had seen myself. He was bent double, quivered as he walked, his shaking hands unsteadily holding a supporting staff, he stammered as he spoke, and generally was what the boys call a "case." He sat across the depot office from me and had just received his papers. It was apparent he was waiting for his friend. They had chummed together on board, so there was nothing odd in his waiting.

For the moment the examining major was occupied with some papers, then the deaf boy came in. He left the door wide open behind him. Quite softly and obviously without any ulterior thought, the major remarked: "Pity you hadn't closed the door!"

The deaf man got up immediately, crossed the room, and closed the door! On the instant, while our mouths fell wide and we gasped in amazement, the shell shock pal sprang to his feet, upright, steady, forceful.

"Ye d—— fool!" he said. Then both collapsed as they caught the eagle glance of the major. Back to Blighty for them, short shrift there, empty spaces to fill in some draft, then France, mud, blood, and Blighty once more.

At Quebec we got our discharge papers and the choice of the money to purchase or a civilian suit already made. In a wild moment I chose the suit. Certainly a useful suit—fine for war gardening. I never wore mine, but another chap more nearly its size was glad of it.

But joking aside, the government cares for us well. We get our back pay, we get the suit, we get our transportation to the old home town where we enlisted, and we are placed on the pension list. Our disablement is calculated on a percentage basis. I was 75 per cent when discharged.

Then for home! The long train journey from east to west loses all monotony through anticipation, and, even better yet, by the welcome given at various points of stopping. Whole municipalities turn out to bid the boys greeting.

No matter what hour of day or night our trainloads of "returned" may pass certain centers and junctions, there are the devoted women and men to greet us. Maybe a motherly body will creep softly into a darkened sleeping car at 3 of a chill under zero morning and drop a kiss on the cheek of some sleeping laddie, who turns wearily and sighs, half awakened, "Is it mother?"

O, yes, they welcome us, and how good it seems. The women folk would have us know by such acts of kindness, by gifts, by attention which no cold nor unearthly hours can daunt, that they realize we have done our best for them. It is good. We like it. We feel our sacrifices have not been vainly made. We are home.

Then the train rolls into the old familiar depot. We hear a band playing—surely Jim Taylor is still a trifle flat on that top E—automobiles are drawn up in the station yard, flags dress them, and there is an eager crowd outside the barrier.

A dozen persons wait on the platform. A welcoming committee. We step down slowly. We are mostly cripples. It seems a hundred years since we entrained so gayly, well, strong, hearty. It is only a hundred weeks or little more.

The committee gives us the glad hand of welcome, then we find our own folks among the crowd. For a minute we hang back to grasp the hand of this pal or that. Suddenly one is lonely—lonely for the boys, for the guns, for the trenches. One is an individual again, awfully alone. The folks are kind, wonderful—one is happy, but the home folks have never been over there. They can see much in their mind's eye—they vaguely understand, but they do not know. We boys know. I know. But we are home now. Fêted, entertained, welcomed, looked up to, pitied perhaps.

Home. The great adventure is over—crippled, maimed, handicapped, life is to commence once more. I am home—back to the same home, but—is it the same home? Yes; the same home, but it is I who am changed. I have been to war—I have awakened. It is good.

"WHAT FOOLS WE MORTALS BE."

A PITTSBURGH physician, Dr. Paul Titus, has collected all the superstitions relative to pregnancy and maternal expression; has labeled, catalogued, and filed them as other folks gather books, autographs, shells, or butterflies.

He exposes his collection in the Journal of the American Medical Association, which was where he made a mistake. The article makes good reading for the learned men who read that journal; it will amuse and entertain them, but there its influence will stop. The place for this article, amusing to many but informing to more, is an almanac. If I can step it out of the medical journal the article will begin to do some good. If somebody will step it from here into an almanac its usefulness will be further increased.

Dr. Titus says that obstetrics forms one of the main subjects of conversation at Red Cross meetings and bridge parties, and thus the superstitions are handed on. I take it that women do not care especially about discussing obstetrics, operations, illnesses, or other unpleasant and often disgusting subjects, but they do want information, and there being no sources of accurate information, the false has no trouble in passing as the genuine article.

Rumors, gossip, and false stories thrive when there is no public press. Billy Sunday says that the lies, rumors, and false charges which caused the crucifixion of Christ could never have made any headway had there been a public press in that day.

We have a public press today, but there are certain subjects that it taboos. In such fields we are slaves to superstition, as were the people of Palestine two thousand years ago. Obstetrics and related subjects is one of these fields. This is one reason why obstetric care is poor and poor obstetric care is responsible for a high accident rate to mothers at childbirth and a high death rate among babies less than two weeks old. The papers will do some good by giving publicity to Dr. Titus' catalogue of superstitions and sayings.

As to maternal impressions and birthmarks, Dr. Titus says that there are so many superstitions about birthmarks that it is impossible to classify them. All sorts of things, from black cats crossing one's path to eating strawberries and watching workmen either fall from scaffolds or stagger home drunk, will mark the baby in various ways if the stories are to be believed.

One never need be at a loss to account for any peculiar markings or malformations the newly born baby may show. If the mother, with the help of one or both grandmothers, will merely think back over the nine months of pregnancy the explanation is sure to be found.

The body of the baby is formed within the first month in all important details. Every structure has assumed its final outlines by the end of the third month. From that time the only changes are those due to growth and the taking on of fat. The mother harbors, shelters, and feeds her developing baby and that is all. No structure in its body is connected in any way with her brain or any nerve in her body.

Among the widely accepted sayings are:

"If the mother raises her arms above her head for any reason the cord will be twisted around the baby's neck." For this statement there is no foundation.

"If the mother touches her face as a habit the baby will be marked in the face." Bosh!

"If the baby sticks out its tongue after its birth it means that the mother intensely desired some article of food during her pregnancy. If some of this food is put on the baby's tongue the habit of sticking out the tongue will end."

Here are some others:

"Oil rubbed on the abdomen makes the labor easy."

"Girls make more trouble during labor than boys."

"The breath must not be drawn in during labor, as that draws the baby's back."

"Blowing in a bottle after labor helps."

"One should keep her mouth shut after labor to prevent hemorrhage."

"To stop hemorrhage put an ax under the bed edge up to cut off the hemorrhage."

"For convulsions tie an onion over the radial artery."

"The mother will not survive if she has twins, one a girl and the other a boy."

"The sheets on a lying-in bed must have been slept in (to take off the chill)."

"An abdominal binder preserves the figure after delivery."

"If the mother does not sleep after delivery put her shoes under the bed with the toes turned out."

"For every child a tooth."

"A woman should not have her hair combed in bed after childbirth, since this causes brain trouble."

All of the old woman's tales about what happens on the ninth day are fiction. Here are a few samples:

"Milk leg occurs on the tenth day" and "a woman must on no account get up for the first time on Sunday."

"There are nine days of sore nipples."

"If one catches cold and it settles on the breasts there will be a gathering of the breasts."

"Acid food taken by the mother sours the milk. Tomatoes are acid and should not be eaten by a nursing mother."

"The mother should never drink water while nursing the baby because it will strangle the child."

"She should not take hold of cold scissors or any other sharp, cold instrument because the milk will be chilled."

"Ice cream freezes the milk."

"Popcorn is good for the nausea of pregnancy."

"Nausea in a husband is a sign of pregnancy of the wife."

"If a husband gets a toothache it is a sign that his wife is pregnant. The date of confinement can be reckoned as nine months after the husband's toothache."

"Heartburn makes hair on the baby."

"If a mother has a great deal of heartburn it is a sign that her baby will have a great deal of hair."

"To cure heartburn eat raw potatoes."

"Nausea stops when the skin grows on the baby."

"Getting the feet wet will cause wet labor."

"The child settles down on the dark of the moon."

"Labor can be brought on when the time is up by dropping a few pennies on the floor."

"If the baby does not come at the calculated time it will not come for two weeks, but will come then."

"If you want a boy eat plenty of peanuts (when pregnant)."

"If you want a girl eat plenty of sweetstuffs of all kinds (when pregnant)."

"If you have a high color it's a girl; if you are pale it's a boy."

"If you are much nauseated it will be a girl."

"If the baby's heart beats over 140 it's a girl; if less, a boy."

"If your baby is carried high in front it's a boy. If low in front and broad in the back it's a girl."

There is no way in which the sex of the child can be determined in any sense of the word. There is nothing that parents can do to cause a baby to be a girl or a boy as they wish it. There is no way by which parents can tell that a baby to be born is a boy or a girl. All signs, sayings, and superstitions bearing on these two points are without foundation.

Dr. Titus ends with a saying that is in line with what I have believed. He bowls that over, too. It is "more boys than girls are born in war times." "More babies are born at night than in the daytime." I expect most doctors think that, at least when I was looking after such cases it always seemed to me that the babies came at night, and, at that, on nights that were bad for going out, but were good for sleeping. I am sure that many physicians subscribe to a companion saying—towit: "Death is most liable to occur at night, and particularly between 2 and 3 o'clock, since vitality is lowest at that hour." Studies have shown that there is no basis for this statement.

Here are a few more samples:

"A change in the moon starts labor."

"The first baby comes early."

"The first baby comes in less than nine months."

"A seven months baby has a better chance to live than one born at eight months." There are many superstitions dealing with young babies, though facts about older babies are becoming known and as they multiply they choke out the superstitions and sayings.

"If the cord is cut long the baby will grow up strong."

"Turn the cord upward in dressing it."

"Give the baby a teaspoonful of water immediately after birth and it will never have the colic."

"If a baby loses weight soon after birth do not worry, because a baby loses weight until the cord falls off."

"Saliva will prevent a baby's skin from chafing."

"A baby must not be allowed to cry lest it cause a rupture."

"Light hurts a baby's eyes."

"Wash the baby's eyes with urine to prevent sore eyes."

"Put breast milk in the baby's eyes to cure sore eyes."

"If a baby wrinkles its forehead and rolls its eyes upward it is a sign of feeble-mindedness."

"Babies must not be picked up else they will become liver grown."

"When a baby has convulsions keep its hands open. If the hands clinch they will not relax and the baby will die."

"Salt the palms of the hands," is a remedy for convulsions.

"When a baby cries make the sign of the cross before his mouth, else the devil will jump down his throat."

"When a baby sneezes say 'gesundheit' or 'God bless it,' because 'at this time the soul leaves the body for a moment.'"

"A baby should be taken upstairs with a gold piece in its hands before being taken down, so that it may rise in the world."

"A child's finger and toe nails should be bitten off instead of clipped for the first year else it will be a thief."

"If you measure a sickly child and repeat a doggerel each part measured grows. Tie knots in the string used to measure with and throw it away."

"After delivery a woman should go downstairs backward."

"Having a baby is good for a patient with epilepsy."

"It is lucky for a baby to be born with a caul."

"Any one possessing a caul will never drown at sea." It will be recalled that David Copperfield was "born with a caul." Also that he was born on a Friday night at 12 o'clock.

"Children born at midnight on Friday night can see ghosts and spirits and are lucky."

"A menstruating woman must not handle milk or it will turn sour. She must not make jelly, for it will not jell."

A few of these superstitions and sayings have been founded on a little fact—just enough to float a mass of fancy. For instance, "if a young woman miss a period she will develop consumption" is absolutely untrue, but it is founded upon the fact that when women develop consumption and run down therefrom menstruation is liable to miss occasionally.

Had Dr. Titus lived in the south he could have added to his collection materially. He reminds us that when we read in books of travel of the superstitions of Africans, Malays, and Filipinos we wonder at their ignorance and credulity. We forget that we are shot through and through with belief as to birthmarks, maternal impressions, and other certain inheritance questions that are just as ridiculous.

I am sure every reader of the above has laughed at some of the sayings and been disgusted by others. I am equally sure that he or she has found one or more of his own pet beliefs in the list. Perhaps as he laughed at the other fellow's mental twist the other fellow was laughing at his.

Letters for this department must be signed with names and addresses of the writers. This department appears daily on the editorial page of "The Daily Tribune."

DEPENDS ON BIRTHPLACE.

Donovan, Ill., July 10.—[To the Friend of the People.]—I read in THE TRIBUNE the other day that a law had been passed by congress and signed by the president, enabling an alien resident to obtain his final naturalization papers. Upon application for such the clerk of the Circuit court of this county claimed he knew nothing of this law. Is it now possible for an alien to obtain his final papers upon application? G. A. W.

You do not give sufficient information upon which to base a reply. Any alien who can meet the requirements of the law may be admitted to be a citizen of the United States. You do not state the place of your birth. Write to the office of the chief naturalization examiner, federal building, Chicago, and furnish information as to the date and place of your birth, the date of your arrival in the United States, the period of your residence in each place, and the date of your declaration of intention. Proper advice will be given you.

FILE ANOTHER DECLARATION.

Chicago, July 10.—[To the Friend of the People.]—I came to this country in June, 1907, and took out my first papers in the same month. I made application for my naturalization papers in 1917. My petition was denied because I broke the law by working as a bartender on Sundays. Since the Sunday closing order was enforced I have not worked on Sundays. Can I get my citizenship papers now? M. R.

A declaration of intention more than seven years old has no naturalization value. Under the opinion of the Supreme court of the state of Illinois decided June 20, 1918, any alien who habitually violates the law of the state of Illinois with regard to the closing of saloons on Sunday during any period of the five years next preceding the date of his petition may not be admitted to be a citizen of the United States.

NEW POLICE STATION.

Chicago, July 7.—[To the Friend of the People.]—As a matter of business interest, I would like to know when the police station which is located at Racine avenue near Chicago avenue will be open. M. K.

We are advised that the opening of this station is delayed until the completion of the Mayfair pumping station in order to learn if an adequate water pressure can be secured, as if sufficient water pressure is not available when the new pumping station is in operation it will be necessary to install a pressure system in the building. It is deemed inadvisable to complete the work on the police station until the question of water pressure is disposed of.

DISPOSE OF ENTIRE ESTATE.

Chicago, July 10.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—1. In settling an estate in which a number of heirs are interested, can the executors be discharged by the court when a single mortgage was given in part payment by the buyer of some of the property? (The balance of the estate has been settled in cash.) If so, what sort of a document should the heirs have to show their equity in the mortgage? G. B.

When the distribution of the estate is made all the assets of the estate should be finally disposed of. Properly the mortgage you mention would have to be sold and cash obtained for it, or it would have to be treated as cash and distributed to any heir as his share or a part of it, if such heir would consent. TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

CANNOT ATTACH SALARY.

Chicago, July 10.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—1. Can the salary of an employé in the election commissioners' office be attached? 2. Does the original garnishee hold good until debt is paid as authorized by the court? 3. If answer to question 1 is "no," how can I collect the debt? A SUBSCRIBER.

1. No.
2. Do not understand.
3. Do not know if he has no property.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

RECOVERING INVESTED MONEY

Chicago, July 10.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I am one of the unfortunates who invested money in the "Birth of a Race" photoplay. Is there any chance of getting back the money I paid in? F. B.

The possibility of your recovering under the blue sky law depends largely on the solvency of the dealer, as to which we are not informed. You might obtain information from the secretary of state, Springfield, Ill. TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

ORDINANCE FOR LAWN SPRINKLING.

Chicago, July 10.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—1. At what hours may a meter user sprinkle his lawns? 2. Having much lawn space, is more than one hose at the same time permissible? 3. Must gardens be watered at lawn sprinkling hours? 4. Are there any regulations in regard to size of hose, nozzle, etc.? A. H. J.

1. Five to 7 a. m. and 7:30 to 10 p. m.
2. Yes, but you must pay extra for the additional hose connection.
3. The ordinances make no exception in favor of gardens.
4. No. TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

As but limited space can be given letters in this department, writers must confine themselves to 200 or 300 words. Unless they give us their full names and addresses their letters will not be considered. No manuscript will be returned unless the writer sends postage for that purpose.

DECLARING WAR ON TURKEY.

Chicago, July 11.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I was greatly interested to read the editorial entitled "War with Turkey."

The arguments advanced by the native Syrian, Ahaham Mitrie Rihbany, against American intervention on the Macedonian front seem plausible, but in reality are fallacious.

Turkey must be destroyed on her own territory; Greece will do it if America heartens her by sending troops to fight side by side with her.

Senator King of Utah recently said: "I have felt for long that we should declare war against Turkey and Bulgaria. They are our enemies and are doing all within their power to aid Germany in her efforts to dominate and crush Europe. Turkey has been a cruel oppressor of the Grecian nation. I sincerely hope when this war is over there will be no Turkey. She should be destroyed. As a government she has utterly failed to do her duty in this world and the dawn of a brighter and better day should see the peoples who have been so long oppressed by her freed from her cruel grasp."

Senator King believes we should declare war against Turkey and Bulgaria. Mr. Rihbany of Syria differs. I fancy Senator King is the safer guide.

HIGH HANDED POLICE METHODS.

Chicago, July 11.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—The Negro Fellowship league desires to commend the attitude of the paper in the Lander's case. It is a common thing that colored men and boys are arrested in this town and kept in the police stations by the dozens and then turned loose. Sometimes they are arrested on suspicion and very often their families may be within a block or two of the station and know nothing whatever of the disappearance of the son, husband or brother as the case may be. There ought to be some way to stop this high handed outrage and we know of no more powerful influence to bring about reform than THE TRIBUNE.

IDA B. WELLS BARNETT.

THE SOLDIERS' REDUCED FARE.

Chanute Field, Rantoul, July 9.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I am writing you on a matter which I am sure you will agree with me is an injustice to all the enlisted men in our army, namely, the 1 cent rate for soldiers. This rate was supposed to have been put into effect so that it would benefit the soldiers when leaving the camps on passes, at least that is what should have been done. As it is, the soldiers now have to pay 3 cents, where at the old rate they only had to pay 2. Of course, a soldier can get the 1 cent rate if he is going on a furlough, but I, who am a soldier, would like to see an enlisted man get one. As it is and was, the only relief we have from camp is on what is called a week end pass, from Saturday at retreat until Monday morning at reveille. How can a soldier, who makes an allotment, which most of them do, pays for his insurance, and subscribes for Liberty bonds, ever get away from camp on the 3 cent rate? In truth, this rate has hurt the soldiers instead of doing them a justice. I am sure you would please all the boys in the army and navy if you would try to do something for us in this matter.

A SOLDIER.

DEFENDING THE SOUTH.

Battle Creek, Mich., July 9.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—As a rule your editorials are intellectual, conservative and dignified, but I considered your attack on the south entirely uncalled for and undignified. A few men passed those diseased Negroes on; the south at large is not responsible for it. It may have been that they were passed because the quota of healthy Negroes was too small. Your cricitism that perhaps the healthy ones were held back was entirely supposition, and was something that should not have been said without some proof.

Your criticism of the administration a while back was severe, and as the days passed you would refer again to it, but say you did not intend to rake up past mistakes. It made me think of the small boy who was told by his mother to pray for forgiveness, which he did, and finished by saying "O Lord, if you are going to forgive me, please do it and don't nag!"

A SOUTHERN WOMAN.

RESPECT FOR THE BOSS.

Chicago, July 11.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Any one who has ever worked in an average sized office knows the disrespect that most people pay to their employers. They never have a good word for the boss.

The majority of bosses are good men, or they would not be bosses, and do not deserve such disloyalty. Why is this? Is it simply because the chief is higher up than they? Maybe, but most likely not.

At any rate this great fault will be eliminated in a large percentage of cases by the war. Nearly every day we read how the soldiers respect and even worship their leaders. When the war is over our men will have more honor for their superiors.

If the war should accomplish nothing else but this it would not be fought in vain.

PHILIP M. KEMPER.

THE GADFLY

By James Branch Cabell.

WHERE other persons decently attempt to conceal their foibles, and mistakes, and vices, this maniac, the literary artist, stung by the gadfly of self-expression, will catalogue all his and print them in a book. Since write he must, interminably he writes about himself because (in this respect at least resembling the other members of his race) he has no certain knowledge as to any one else. And the part he has played in other persons' lives he will likewise expose in a manner that is not always chivalrous. Indeed, he will undertake much unethical research with the assistance of women who do not entirely comprehend they are participating in a philosophical experiment. And all this, too, he will print in his damned book, for from a social standpoint the creative literary artist is always a traitor, and not infrequently a scoundrel. Meanwhile he becomes callous, by virtue of never yielding so entirely to any emotion as to lose sight of its being an interesting topic to write about. All that which is naturally fine in him, in fact, he will so study, and regard from every aspect, that from much handling it grows dingy. And very clearly does the luckless knave perceive this fact, for all the while, amid these constant impairments, his vision grows more quick and keen, and mercilessly shows him the twisted and scathed thing he is.

Nor is this the final jibe. However pleasant it be to dream of survival in the speech and actions and libraries of posterity, reflection suggests that this "immortality" is deplorably parochial. For we and our contemporaneous wasters of shoe leather and printers ink, it may be recalled, are that "posterity" to which Shakespeare and Milton so confidently addressed themselves: and it were folly to pretend that to us, as a generation, either of these poets is today, not merely as generally known and read, but as generally an intellectual influence, as Mr. Harold Bell Wright or Mrs. Gene Stratton Porter[*]. Of course, a century hence there will still be a few read—for "Hamlet," whereas "Freckles"—which is regarded, I believe, as Mrs. Porter's masterpiece—will conceivably be out of print. Yet even in the whole outcome of things it may be disputed if the great creative artist exercises more influence, all in all, or is more widely a public benefactor, than is the perpetrator of a really popular novel . . .

I have spoken of the literary artist's patient immolation, which he himself contrives in order that his dream, once snared with comely and fit words, may be perpetuated, and that so the artist may usurp the brain cells and prompt the flesh of unborn generations. And I have spoken, too, of the "Faustus," at some length, as the indisputable masterpiece that it is: but suppose you compare its actual aggregate influence upon humanity with the influence, say, of the novel called "Queed," which was so extensively purchased, not even the publishers pretend nowadays that "Queed" was an important contribution to literature; but this book was read by millions, and by many of its readers was naïvely enjoyed and admired and more or less remembered. "Queed" did thus somewhat influence all these honest folk and tinge their minds, such as they were. Now the "Faustus" during three centuries of polite speeches about it, has not with any such directness tinged the minds of millions, nor has it been read by thousands of their own volition. Nor has the "Faustus" ever given that general pleasure which was provoked by "Queed." And, moreover, the "uplifting" optimism of "Queed," it must be remembered, really brought out that which was best in the readers who took the book seriously.

You cannot, of course, evoke from any source more than is already there, and to every end the means must be commensurate; so that, while to bring out the best there is in a wrecked vessel or a gold mine, or a person of some culture, requires a deal of elaborated apparatus, a nutpick will do as much for a walnut, and a popular novel for the average mind. And the point is that this average mind, which from "Queed" derived enjoyment and some benefit, has (after a brief toleration of the "Faustus" on account of its dreadful "comic" scenes) for some three centuries perceived in Marlowe's masterpiece "just another one of those old classics," and will so view it always. . . . We thus reach by plain arithmetic the proof that as a writer Mr. Sydnor Harrison (who wrote "Queed"[†]) has exercised a greater influence, and has really amounted to more than Christopher Marlowe; and, continuing to be quite honest in our mathematics, we find that as touches influence, neither craftsman can pretend to rival the sympathetic scribe whose daily column of advice to the lovelorn is printed simultaneously by hundreds of our leading public journals, and daily advises millions as to the most delicate and important relations of their existence.

AND should you raise the objection that, none the less, the "Faustus" is fine literature, whereas "Queed" is fairly answerable to some other description—that the drama is profuse in verbal magic, and the novel, to put the matter as civilly as possible, is not remarkable for literary art—I can but remind you that, after all, your protest amounts to astonishingly little. All you assert is true enough, but to what, in the high and potent name of St. Stultitia (who presides over the popularity of our reading matter) does your objection amount? Even to the very, very few who can distinguish between competent work and butchery, the "style" of an adroit writer is apt to become an increasing annoyance, as he proceeds with such miraculous and conscious nicety: until at last you are fretted into active irritation that the fellow does not ever stumble and flounder into some more humanly inadequate way of expressing himself. And for the rest, how many persons really care, or even notice, whether a book be conscientiously written? It is merely "something to read"; and they, good souls, have been reduced to looking it over, not quite by any reverential quest of "art," but by a lack of anything else to do.

For literature is a starveling cult, kept alive by the "literary." Such literature has been, and will continue to be, always. I grant you that it will continue always. But always, too, its master works will affect directly no one save the "literary"; and to perceive this is the serious artist's crowning discouragement. For he has every reason to know what "literary" persons are, if but by means of discomfortable introspection, and all and sundry of them he despises. At an authors' league dinner, or any similar assemblage of people who "write," you may always detect the participants uneasily peeping toward mirrors, to see if they really do look like the others. . . . And it is only persons such as these, the artist sometimes comprehends forlornly, who will be making any to-do over him a thousand years from today! At such depressing moments of prevision he recognizes that this desire to write perfectly, and thus to win to "literary" immortality, is but another dynamic illusion; and he concedes, precisely as Congreve long ago detected, that, viewed from any personal standpoints, the game is very far from being worth the candle.

"It is his almost clairvoyant power of reading the human soul that has made Mr. Wright's books among the most remarkable works of the present age."—Oregon Journal, Portland. [†] "Of all American authors who have made their debut in the twentieth century, I regard Mr. Henry Sydnor Harrison as the most promising. . . . Of all our younger writers he seems to have the largest natural endowment."—William Lyon Phelps in "The Advance of the English Novel" (published 1916).

WAR AS A JOB

By Lieut. Coningsby Dawson

The following is an excerpt from Lieut. Coningsby Dawson's new war book, "Out to Win," published by the John Lane company, New York.

II.

I HAVE been so fortunate as to be able to watch three separate nations facing up t othe splendor of Armageddon—England, France, America. The spirit of each was different. I arrived in England from abroad the week after war had been declared. There was a new vitality in the air, a suppressed excitement, a spirit of youth and—it sounds ridiculous—of opportunity. The England I had left had been wont to go about with a puckered forehead; she was a victim of self-disparagement. She was like a mother who had borne too many children and was at her wits' end to know how to feed or manage them. They were getting beyond her control.

One week of the iron tonic of war had changed all that. The atmosphere was as different as the lowlands from the Alps; it was an atmosphere of devil-may-care assurance and adventurous manhood. Every one had the summer look of a boat race crowd when the Leander is to be pulled off at Henley. In comparing the new England with the old, I should have said that every one now had the comfortable certainty that he was wanted—that he had a future and something to live for. But it wasn't the something to live for that accounted for this gay alertness; it was the sure foreknowledge of each least important man that he had something worth dying for at last.

THE Frenchman cannot understand us, and I don't blame him. Our high spirits impress him as untimely and indecent. War for him is not a sport. How could it be, with his homesteads ravaged, his cities flattened, his women violated, his populations prisoners in occupied territories? For him war is a martyrdom which he embraces with a fierce gladness. His spirit is well illustrated by an incident that happened the other day in Paris. A descendant of Racine, a well known figure at the opéra, was traveling in the Métro when he spotted a poilu with a string of ten medals on his breast. The old aristocrat went over to the soldier and apologized for speaking to him. "But," he said, "I have never seen any poilu with so many decorations. You must be of the very bravest."

"That is nothing," the man replied somberly; "before they kill me I shall have won many more. This I earned in revenge for my wife, who was brutally murdered. And this and this and this for my daughters who were ravished. And these others—they are for my sons who are now no more."

"My friend, if you will let me, I should like to embrace you." And there, in the sight of all the passengers, the old habitué of the opera and the common soldier kissed each other. The one satisfaction that the French blind have is in counting the number of Boches they have slaughtered. "In that raid ten of us killed fifty," one will say; "the memory makes me very happy."

We in England, still less in America, have never approached the loathing which is felt for the Boche in France.

WITH us war is a sport. With the French it is a martyrdom. But with the Americans it is a job. "We've got four years to do this job. We've got four years to do this job," as the American soldiers chant. I think in these three attitudes towards war as a martyrdom, as sport, and as a job, you get reflected the three gradations of distance by which each nation is divided from the trenches. France had her tribulation thrust upon her. She was attacked; she had no option. England, separated by the channel, could have restrained the weight of her strength, biding her time. She had her moment of choice, but rushed to the rescue the moment the first Hun bayonet gleamed across the Belgian threshold. America, fortified by the Atlantic, could not believe that her peace was in any way assailed. The idea seemed too madly far fetched. At first she refused to realize that his apportioning of a continent three thousand miles distant from Germany was anything but a pipe dream of diplomats in their dotage. It was inconceivable that it could be the practical and achievable cunning of military bullies and strategists. The truth dawned too slowly for her to display any vivid burst of anger. "It isn't true," she said. And then, "It seems incredible." And lastly, "What infernal impertinence!"

What has impressed me most in my tour of the American activities in France is the businesslike relentlessness of the preparations. Everything is being done on a Titanic scale and everything is being done to last. The ports, the railroads, the plants that are being constructed will still be standing a hundred years from now. There's no "Home for Christmas" optimism about America's method of making war. One would think she was expecting to be still fighting when all the present generation is dead. She is investing billions of dollars in what can only be regarded as permanent improvements. The handsomeness of her spirit is illustrated by the fact that she has no understanding with the French for reimbursement.

In sharp contrast with this handsomeness of spirit is the iciness of her purpose as regards the Boche. I heard no hatred of the individual German—only the deep conviction that Prussianism must be crushed at all costs. The American does not speak of "Poor old Fritz" as we do on our British front. He's too logical to be sorry for his enemy. His attitude is too sternly impersonal for him to be moved by any emotions, whether of detestation or charity, as regards the Hun. All he knows is that a Frankenstein machinery has been set in motion for the destruction of the world; to counteract it he is creating another piece of machinery. He has set about his job in just the same spirit that he set about overcoming the difficulties of the Panama canal. He has been used to overcoming the obstinacies of nature; the human obstinacies of his new task intrigue him. I believe that, just as in peace times big business was his romance and the wealth which he gained from it was often incidental, so in France the job as a job impels him, quite apart from its heroic object. After all, smashing the Pan-Germanic combine is only another form of trust-busting—trust-busting with aeroplanes and guns instead of with law and ledgers.

"Let me get into the trenches," that was the cry of the American soldier that I heard on every hand. Having witnessed his eagerness, cleanness, and intensity, I ask no more questions as to how he will acquit himself.

I have presented him as an extremely practical person, but no American that I ever met was solely practical. If you watch him closely you will always find that he is doing practical things for an idealistic end.

TO HAPPIER DAYS!

By Mabel McElliott

Against the shabby house I pass each day
(The town is strange, and all so new to see)
Pink hollyhocks made friendly sport of me,
With nod and smile and endless courtesy
Enlive the lonely sameness of my way.
Slim little maids in rosy morning frocks,
They make a splash of color on the gray—
The sun so bright—a pity not to play,
But this old world is sadly work-a-day,
And I must hasten on, my hollyhocks!

I like to think that somewhere, overseas,
Perhaps in some neglected garden place,
Shy flowers from home lean out with wayward grace—
Blue iris and the valley lilies' lace—
Reminding them of happier times than these, . . .
Of happy times that are so soon to be,
When they come marching home to us—our men—
The world's work done, the land made clean again!

Illusion.

SNAP dragons are yellow along the open ways, and fields, covered with clover, stretch off to the west in the glory of the close of day, with the shimmer of waving fox grass, plumed and iridescent, meeting the ruddy mists which soften the radiance of day fittingly to its end.

Out of the white heat into the purple depths bright colored at their edge, with the shimmer of land and the shimmer of sky spreading a cover of illusion over realities known but denied, seen but not perceived.

Not to perceive is the gift which softens the prospect for man who in his present, in his intimacies, in his necessities, sees more than suits his happiness but who for his prospects finds radiance only softening and in its mellowing gaining glory, who looks for his greatest good in the west and seeks the deep purple with an illusioned soul.

If the song in his life grows fainter, as the song of the wood thrush dies away, the colors of his day grow deeper as his day comes to its end. The helianthus brightly meets the white light of day and the fox grass softens the western way to night.

LEAVES FROM THE NOTEBOOK

Of Henry J. Allen

OCCASIONALLY you get into a situation over here which for the moment seems as far away from war as Chicago or Kansas City.

A few days ago I attended a luncheon of the American club of Paris. This is a club composed of Americans who have been in Paris many years and have pursued adventures in business, study, and pleasure. This club has withstood so well the pressure of war that it still gives its formal luncheon once a week. Here oratory is served American fashion, just after the coffee, while the waiters are breaking the dishes in a nearby room.

There were only a few men in uniform. As I looked over the 800 civilians at the long tables I realized it was just such a scene as I could have witnessed at a luncheon in New York, Pittsburgh, Dallas, or any other American city. The men all looked American, though most of them had been tailored in French shops and a few of them wore pointed beards. Some of them had played important parts in French business life and hadn't thought much of home ties for a long while. When America joined the allies they began to pick up the threads of American life again; before that they were rather aloof and talked of America as a distant relative of which they were none too proud. Now they seek eagerly to do whatever they can to help the American situation; they've had a new birth of American patriotism and they are beginning to take to oratory in real earnest again.

The orator on this occasion was Lord Derby, the British ambassador to France. He is the author of that grim philosophy of absolute patriotism, "Every man in Britain owes his life to his country." He is a simple, fair skinned man of the big framed English type. He was introduced in a fine "we have with us on this occasion" presentation outburst. His first remarks were to disclaim any pretensions to public speaking. He spoke humorously of after dinner oratory, rather blaming it on America. He reminded us again that 300 years ago the Chinese empire did away with after dinner speeches on the ground that they inflicted a barbarous torture that was entirely unnecessary. Then he proceeded to make a first rate speech.

His first compliments to us were upon our act of drafting for our army. He spoke of the first volunteer efforts of England and confessed that while they were wonderfully successful in arousing patriotism and bringing immediately an army of patriots into the field, the system failed to get into action all who should have gone and took many who should have remained at home.

LORD DERBY then spoke, as all Americans and Englishmen do, of our past difficulties. I have never heard a speaker on an international occasion representing either England or America leave this out. As usual he called it a family quarrel, but he prophesied that while the military reputations of both nations had been enhanced in the past by our fights with each other, now we would make our military reputations "fighting together for the same result, for justice for all the smaller nations on earth." Then he said this gripping thing: "We shall never grow apart. A common sorrow will keep us together. Hardly a home exists in my country that has not been touched by the angel of death. It will rap at American doors. The rich and poor share a thing which is the same to both. It is a sorrow which brings both individuals and nations together. It will keep us together for all the generations."

He told us we'd have to "remain in with both feet. We stand now together for the cause of liberty and justice, and we'll stand together till we see the rights of man vindicated for our children."

Then the American ambassador, the Hon. William G. Sharp, replied. Mr. Sharp was a Democratic congressman from an inland Ohio city when the failure of his party in his district retired him and the cyclonic success of his party in the nation picked him up and dropped him at Paris to succeed Herrick. Fate tagged him for a big part in the center field of the big game, and he is playing up to it. From being a provincial statesman from an interior district he has become adapted to the world language. He is acquiring what the academy of political science would call the international mind, and his reply to Lord Derby was strong, sensible, and, like everything else that comes out of Ohio, typically American in the best sense. The French like him for his plain, everyday common sense, his democratic tastes, and his lack of social ambitions.

After the speaking we all got out of the room just as rapidly as we could—the same as we do back home. We dropped our company manners and waited with impatience at the check stand for our hats, and then chased back to our work with a nervous haste that distinguishes the American from all others over here. The Frenchman seems to have unlimited time on his hands. He goes to work at 9 in the morning, stops for two hours at noon, while he eats a seven course luncheon and gets back to his office leisurely. You cannot hurry him. He remembers that the French nation is over a thousand years old, and that what we do about the matter today isn't going to change things much if it's an act that can be performed tomorrow as well, or practically as well, as today. If the thing can go over until day after tomorrow, or, even better, until some time next week, it goes over. No Frenchman spoils a good luncheon just to get back to work, though he'll leave his dinner if there is fighting to be done.

ON the way back to my office I passed the German embassy standing silent, gates locked, windows boarded, but with the beautiful vines and flowers climbing up the lovely walls of the garden. A French gendarme was on guard at the gate, but no other living thing disturbed this much hated spot of German territory. The embassy is a dignified place, looking out across the Seine, about a block from the Palais d'Orsay, where the luncheon was held. As we passed it an under secretary of a legation gave me this story of German nerve. Early in March, one night, air raiders dropped about a dozen German bombs in this neighborhood. None of them hit the building, but one fell in the nearby street. It killed two French gendarmes who were guarding the German property, and shattered some of the embassy windows. The German government has sent to the French government a bill of over 1,300 francs for damage to the German property as the result of German bombs. Can you beat it?

For over a week now Paris has been having brilliant moonlight nights, which bathe this wonderful city in a beauty of mellow outline, of vague tree shadows, of dim glorious vistas which reach along shining boulevards. You can stand under the obelisk in the Place de la Concorde and look up the Champs Elysees, to where the great Arc de Triomphe, a mile or so away, stands out like a live thing illuminated by a spirit. You wander over to the bridge that leads across the river to the chamber of deputies and gaze down past the garden of the Tuilleries to the big shadow of the Louvre; then you turn to face the Rue Royale and pay homage to the exquisite church of the Madeleine.

At about 11 o'clock you turn to go home, for by that time the siren has sounded the alerte and you know that the spawn of German hell will be dropping on some of this chaste beauty within the next half hour. You go with lingering feet, for there have begun to rise out of the square, out of distant streets, out of parks and boulevards, a swarm of giant bags, thirty feet long, looking like German sausages. They are captive balloons going up thousands of feet; they are not armed or manned, but their purpose is to spread the net of wires so that no airplane will dare fly below them. As they rise to a great height they keep the airplanes high and make it difficult for German air men to know just what part of Paris they are over. We've had an air raid or an attempted raid nearly every night for a week. They are hard on nerves. A member of the Red Cross office force said to me yesterday: "For the first time in my life I have come to dread the moon; and in its proper place I suppose I should still love it. But this is neither the time nor the place for a moon."

I heard the same sentiment expressed in another way one fog filled rainy night in London last October by a prominent Britisher, who glanced out at the dripping scene and said: "What a lovely night it is going to be." He was thinking of the comfort of an undisturbed night's sleep for the population of London. The Red Cross girl was thinking of those who die on these brilliant moonlit nights.

THE TANKS

by Maj. Gen. E. D. Swinton, C.B., D.S.O.

(Reprinted, with permission, from the World's Work.)

ON a certain Friday in September, 1916, after two years of fighting, when it might have been thought that human ingenuity in the art of killing had been exhausted, a fresh engine of war was suddenly sprung upon a world sick of hearing of new methods of slaughter. A day or two later, so soon as the newspapers were able to give some information about this development, the word "tank" was on all British lips, and since that moment has probably been spoken, written, and printed more often than during the whole previous period since its incorporation into the English language.

This prosaic little word, also, has by its association with one of the most striking episodes of the world war and one of the few technical surprises which the allies have so far sprung on their enemies, and by the fact that its novel application signalized the birth of a new arm, been invested with a romantic meaning of which it can never be deprived. The machine it describes is no ephemeral weapon of occasion—the materialization of a happy thought for one special operation. Whatever the counter measures it may call into being, and although its present immature shape may be as remote from its eventual perfection as "Puffing Billy" from a compound decapod freight locomotive, the tank has come to stay. That Friday in September, 1916, marked a step forward. It was the beginning of an era in which dwindling man power will force more and more into prominence the necessity for the conservation of life, and in which the power and insensibility of machinery will have to be as fully exploited upon the field of battle as they have been in that of industry.

It is not only in English that the word suddenly acquired importance and an entirely fresh significance, for it has enriched the military vocabularies of many other languages, including German, which have borrowed it in its new sense. And curious as it is to British ears to hear "tank" pronounced by Frenchmen, Russians, Italians, and Roumanians, it would probably sound yet more strange to Americans, in whose slang it has a meaning quite unknown even amongst the most bibulous over on this side.

NOVEL to the present generation as is the tank, the basic principle underlying it—i. e., the provision of collective protection to troops attacking, and therefore on the move—is not new. It has exerted its influence ever since the time when engines capable of throwing large numbers of missiles took their place in warfare. The present machine is the result of evolution, through intermediate stages, as mechanical science has grown, of old prototypes, such as the Roman testudo, or tortoise, and the medieval belfry, used in siege operations, in which the missile throwing power of the defense gradually forced on the attack the adoption of some form of mobile protection. The reason for its production is the same (making allowance for development) as that which was responsible for the tortoise of old—the great fire power of the defense, of recent years greatly intensified by the introduction of the machine gun. The possibility of producing it is due to the perfection of the internal combustion engine, to which also the ordinary automobile, the airplane, the submarine, and the airship owe their existence.

Ever since the appearance of the magazine rifle the advantage that would be conferred on the attack by employing a moving armored shield, fort, or cupola has indeed been so obvious that a vague consciousness of it has probably at some time or other formed the subject of the day dreams even of those not directly concerned with war, but happening to possess some knowledge of military history and mechanics and to be blessed with imagination. Since the introduction of the machine gun, and the more recent appearance of the armored motor car of the ordinary wheeled type, the concrete idea of constructing some such engine has occurred to the minds of many more, especially to engineers.

Independently, without knowledge on their part of a previous abortive effort, a similar idea took shape in the minds of some other soldiers at the very beginning of the war; and it will specially interest the American reader to learn that it was on this occasion inspired by an invention from the country in which new ideas are supposed always to be welcome. In July, 1914, it became known that there was in existence an automobile for agricultural purposes, propelled on the caterpillar principle, which was possessed of quite unusual powers of crossing rough ground and traversing obstacles. This was the Holt tractor, made in Peoria, Ill., U. S. A. The accounts of the performances of this machine, constructed for haulage and not specially for climbing, suggested that one similarly designed especially to travel across country would, except in speed, have all the value of the existing armored motor cars without their limitations.

As time went on, as the operations assumed the character of siege warfare, and as the Germans had time to erect miles of barbed wire and other obstacles, the effectiveness of their machine guns was greatly increased. In proportion, also, as the defenses, including the dugouts and shelters for these guns, were elaborated, did the immunity of the latter from artillery fire keep pace more or less with the gradually increasing weight and number of the allied guns. This progressive improvement of the defenses continued until the machine guns were ensconced in caverns and galleries thirty feet below ground level during bombardment, and brought up only at the last moment for a point-blank battue of the attacking infantry.

If it be asked, therefore, what single factor was most instrumental in forcing the tank into being, it can be said that it was the logical exploitation by the Germans of the machine gun, usually the Maxim, probably the most efficient weapon of wholesale destruction ever created.

There is an English proverb which commends as a cure "a hair of the dog that bit you." And it is an interesting fact, though hardly a coincidence, if national inventive characteristics be borne in mind, that one of the most deadly man killing machines, which the world owes to the genius of one American, the late Sir Hiram Maxim, should have found its antidote in a device directly inspired by the invention of a compatriot, Mr. Benjamin Holt.

Look Out for Real Trouble When the Tank Goes Wrong

BY HIGH SPEED.

IF there is one part of the car more than another that gives the car owner little or no occasion for worry it is the gasoline tank. In fact, about the only thought accorded this part is its capacity in relation to the price of fuel.

The tank needs little attention, for it is usually good for the life of the car, but once or twice a season there are minor adjustments of this part that ought to be made. The tank as a whole should be inspected, the fuel line connectons should be tightened and supports drawn up, two or three times in the course of the year.

If a fuel tank is poorly made and of poor material it will give trouble of a very serious nature. The seams may open or leaks may appear, which are highly undesirable in the present condition of the gasoline market.

Furthermore, if the tank is not properly installed and supported, there will be trouble. And that is one thing about the fuel tank; generally it goes along attending to business without the slightest trouble, but when it does decide to "cut up," it makes a thorough job of it.

Up to a few years ago fuel tanks were made of copper, riveted and soldered. This is an ideal construction. The copper is always clean and takes the solder better than any other metal, but the copper tank was expensive not only as to material, but in the amount of labor involved.

The material generally used in making fuel tanks today is known as terne plate; it is a sheet steel, on which has been laid a coating of a composition of lead and tin. This makes a satisfactory construction without the expense of copper.

There are a number of different types of construction used in building modern fuel tanks. In one of these the cylinder of the tank is flanged out at the ends and a convex head is then beaded over the flange and sweated on. In another type the head of the tank is forced on the cylinder, the flange on the head is beaded over, and the joint is sweated.

Still another type employs a corrugation in the cylinder of the tank, the convex head with outward flanges being forced in, after which the edge of the cylinder is spun over and the joint sweated. In this latter construction there is no flange on the outside of the tank, which may be located in a comparatively constricted space.

It is getting to be common practice to install two or more baffle plates in the fuel tank to direct the flow of liquid. The baffle plates are generally riveted and soldered in place.

Within the last year or so there has come into considerable use what are known as "drawn" tanks. This construction may be described as embodying two deep pans joined together at the flanges.

The great virtue of this method of construction lies in the ability to produce all sorts of unusual shapes and yet retain the essential strength. Irregularity of form is practically inevitable in tanks for cowl installation, which is considered desirable by many designers. The drawn tank costs more to produce than the built up types.

From the point of view of the car owner, about the most important matter in connection with the tank is the method of supporting it. The fuel tank with its full burden on board is heavy and it is subject to certain stresses when the car is traveling at high speed. A rear tank, for instance, must not be supported too rigidly, as in the inevitable heaving of the chassis frame the joint may be sprung.

Perhaps the most satisfactory method of attaching the fuel tank is to use straps or bands of eighteen or twenty gauge steel, an inch and a half wide and lined with brake lining material to prevent squeaking. In installing drawn tanks, the designers have to employ bolster plates to keep the supporting straps from bending over the joints, which would break them in short order.

A car owner recently had a great deal of trouble with breakage of his fuel tank. There seemed to be no reason for the condition, but investigation showed that the spring clip (it was a rear hung tank) was striking the seam of the tank, due to deflection and side sway as the car traveled.

In dealing with the fuel tank, it must be remembered that while solder acts admirably as a seal between two metals, it cannot be called upon to stand up under strains and stresses. It is not intended for that purpose.

When a leak occurs in the fuel tank the obvious place to look first is at the soldered joints, provided the tank embodies that form of construction. The best way of handling seams that are to be subjected to strains is by riveting, supplemented by solder.

In tanks where the gasoline feed tube enters at the top it is desirable to brace it at the bottom, so as to minimize vibration. The filler spouts also are better placed in the body of the tank, rather than on one of the heads. With the spout on top of the body, no air trap can form, which obviates trouble in filling the tank.

Like New Sunday Plan.

Central service for night and Sunday emergency calls is reported to have worked splendidly in St. Louis during its try out week. The single emergency service station answered 75 calls the first Sunday under the new system. In each case where the service required was other than emergency work, the cars were towed in and turned over to the dealer selected by the owner of the car.

Repair shops are to be closed at 6 p. m. daily and all day Sunday in Rockford also, with one central service station to take care of emergencies.

Fageol Tractors Now.

War does strange things to the automobile factories. The Fageol Motors company of California started not so long ago building the highest priced motor car in America. Now the sumptuous aristocrat has been abandoned and Fageol is building tractors. You couldn't run the gamut from luxury to utilitarianism much more abruptly than that.

Tribune Tours

XIV.—To Madison, Kilbourn and the Dells.

ROADS that average from fair to good may be traveled by the motorist bound for the picturesque Dells of the Wisconsin—hard roads for the most part, with a few dirt stretches thrown in to make the traveler appreciate the better sections when he comes to them. A few miles of dirt and clay between Wheeling and McHenry constitute the poorest section that will be encountered during the first 150 miles of travel, but these should not cause trouble except in wet weather. From McHenry on the roads are mostly gravel and may be traveled safely at any time.

The Dells trip offers a number of options at various points, as indicated by the lighter lines on the map. For instance, by traveling about twelve miles farther at the start, one may be sure of hard roads by going to Elgin and thence north through Algonquin and Crystal Lake to a point between Greenwood and Hebron, where the main route may be picked up. Those who start from the north shore suburbs may drive west from Highland Park to Half Day and on through Diamond Lake and Volo to McHenry.

Between Janesville and Madison the route by way of Edgerton and Stoughton will be found nearly as good as the recommended one. Owing to road improvements that have been made within the last year, the section between Madison and Kilbourn through Sauk City and Baraboo will be found much better for travel than the old route through Dane and Lodi. Another advantage is that it eliminates the ferry trip across the Wisconsin river.

From data in the 1918 Automobile Blue Book.

Exports Show Decline.

For May, according to records just compiled from figures made public by the customs branch of the treasury department, exports of automobiles, both commercial and passenger types, including parts except engines and tires, declined to $7,725,489 from the mark of $11,429,091 of May of the previous year.

Where May, 1917, was nearly $2,000,000 ahead of April before it, May this year is practically $500,000 less than last April in the figures, exports during that month amounting to $8,246,285. Exports of tires in this same two months rose from $1,271,248 to $1,464,791.

Exports of passenger cars for the month fell to 2,801, as compared with 6,726 for May of last year. The value of those shipped out of the country in the later period was $2,907,300, against $5,490,509 for May of a year ago.

Of automobiles imported, there is still little to be said, as might be expected. In May of last year there were eight brought in; this year the same month shows three. The value of this item is $10,400.

In Australia.

A canvass of the automobile situation in Australia indicates that no less than 84 per cent of the automobiles in that country are being used as necessities. Much time is being saved in transportation by salesmen, farmers, and business men generally, and there is a most conspicuous absence of unnecessary riding.

Locking the Car Isn't the Only Way to Baffle the Automobile Thief

BY HAROLD F. BLANCHARD.

[In Motor Life.]

THIEF PROOFING the car can be done in a variety of ways. The best method is to use some efficient form of automobile lock, but for those to whom the idea of using a lock does not appeal there are other means of preventing the unauthorized operation of the car. The ideal way to protect your car is to lock it and, in addition, to make use of one of the following hints.

If the owner, when he leaves the car, can do some simple thing to it to render its operation difficult or impossible, the chance of a thief taking the trouble, assuming that he has the ability, to make away with the car is about as small as if it were securely locked.

Whatever is done to put the car out of commission temporarily should be something that is hard for the thief to discover but is easy for the owner to do. Also it should not cost much.

Many of the devices employed affect the ignition and one of the cleverest of these consists of the use of a two candle power electric bulb set in a lamp socket in the instrument board and connected to the primary ignition circuit in such a way that when the bulb is removed the current is shut off. When the owner leaves the car he drops the bulb into his pocket, secure in the feeling that no thief will ever solve the secret.

This idea has a variety of modifications. A fuse might be used instead of a lamp bulb, or a hidden switch may be employed. The latter may be located under the front seat cushion, under the cowl, or on the back of the instrument board.

As the ignition current is usually shut off by grounding the primary circuit, an effective method is to ground the primary wire at some unexpected point, easy to reach but hard to see.

Removing some vital part of the ignition apparatus is excellent, but it involves the trouble of raising the hood. On all battery ignition systems and some magnetos the distributor brush may be lifted out without the slightest difficulty and in about as short a time as it would take to lock the car.

On some magnetos the high tension conductor which runs from the rear collector ring to the distributor brush at the front may be removed in about half a second. Short circuiting the safety spark gap is very effective, provided the gap is not in plain sight. A small ball of fine wire or tin foil can be used to good advantage between the points of the gap. Current to the plugs is entirely cut off.

If the cables leading to the spark plug are of about the same length they can be exchanged on each pair of the plugs so that no spark occurs at the right time.

As the carburetor has a spring controlled air valve it is possible to drill a tiny hole through the valve guide and the valve stem, so that when an inconspicuous pin is placed through it the valve is held opened or closed, as desired, so that the engine does not receive the proper mixture.

A three way valve in the gasoline line operated preferably by an inconspicuous rod which extends out to the side of the car, will fool most thieves. With it the gasoline line can be shut off and the carburetor drained in one operation.

There are two or three interesting uses of locks which it seems right to include in this story. If the crank handle is carried locked in the tool box, then a fairly safe method of protecting the car is to padlock the starter pedal so that it cannot be depressed. The thief is thus without ordinary means for starting the car and cannot crank it unless it is on a hill or unless he can tow it away.

A padlocked damper on the intake or exhaust pipe can be used effectively. The best place for it is on the intake pipe, but a more unexpected place is on the exhaust pipe. The disadvantage with the use of such a damper is that if the device is homemade the hood must be raised.

An excellent means of protecting the car is to put a switch in the main circuit leading from the battery to both the starting motor and the ignition system. The switch should be carefully housed in a steel case which can be locked, but the lock should be easy to reach. This is a device that has not been used to a great extent. It is unusual, unexpected, and very difficult to circumvent.

SEEMS AS IF THIS SOUNDS A BIT TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE

IT should be a pleasure to be pinched in Glencoe. The village authorities, through their manager, have issued the following bulletin:

To the officers of the Glencoe police force: Speeding instructions for year 1918:

In all cases where you have occasion to arrest any auto or motorcycle driver for speeding you will observe the following:

1. Get exact time over a distance of at least one block or past one intersection.
2. Wherever there is any question as to the rate of speed of the machine you are following give the driver the benefit of the doubt.
3. Give courteously such information as will make clear to the driver where and when he is to appear and for what reason, and note same on stub given to the driver.
4. The village will not support the officer should he get into any disputes or arguments with the persons he has arrested; discourtesy will be subject to punishment by removal from the force.
5. The test of the offense is whether or not a person is driving at an unreasonable or dangerous speed; you will be entirely guided by this provision of the statute.
6. Under no circumstances shall the officer accept currency, checks, or any negotiable papers in settlement of a case. The judge alone is empowered to try and settle cases and handle any fines resulting therefrom.

Lightest Type of Liberty Truck Is Again in Disfavo

THE "off again, on again" ca of the lighter types of Lib truck—which was heralded, w it appeared, as an achieveme equal to that represented by the L erty airplane engine—has received other jolt in the unofficial thoug parently authentic announcement the "AA," or lightest type, is slated for abandonment.

After thorough test, it is said, G. M. It Is Your Own Fault If Your Car Isn't New Looking!

Have you been rubbing or spraying on heavy oil polishes, wax or pastes? Such preparations coat the surface with a filmy, greasy or waxy covering. When the car gets hot from the sun or engine running, this coating naturally softens and collects dirt and dust. When the car cools off this dirt and dust congeals in the finish—result, a blurred, streaky, ugly finish.

The manufacturers of your car took great pains—went to tremendous expense to give your car its original beautiful finish. They neither use themselves nor recommend your using any substance that covers up or films this original finish. They do, however, tell you to clean and improve the original finish with a light liquid compound such as Pimbley's Auto-Newer. A few drops on a cheesecloth rag—a few brisk rubs, and your car looks brand new!

Soap and water alone insufficient to clean your car and bring back its beautiful original finish. Too much water harms the fine enamel or varnish surface of an automobile.

Do not rub or spray on a coating of heavy oil, wax or paste on the finish of your car. They leave a filmy greasy covering, affected by heat and cold, catching dirt and dust.

Pimbley's Auto-Top-Newer
For faded, leaky tops—worn or cracked cushions of mohair, pantasote or leather. A light black liquid dressing applied with a brush. Dries in fifteen minutes. Won't rub off. Weatherproof. Price, half pints, 60c; pint, $1; quarts, $1.70.

YES! The right way to keep your car new looking is to clean and restore the ORIGINAL finish to its first beauty. Dust off the car and go over the surface with a cheesecloth dampened with Pimbley's Auto-Newer. You will be amazed and delighted with the results.

Price 50c and $1 per bottle.

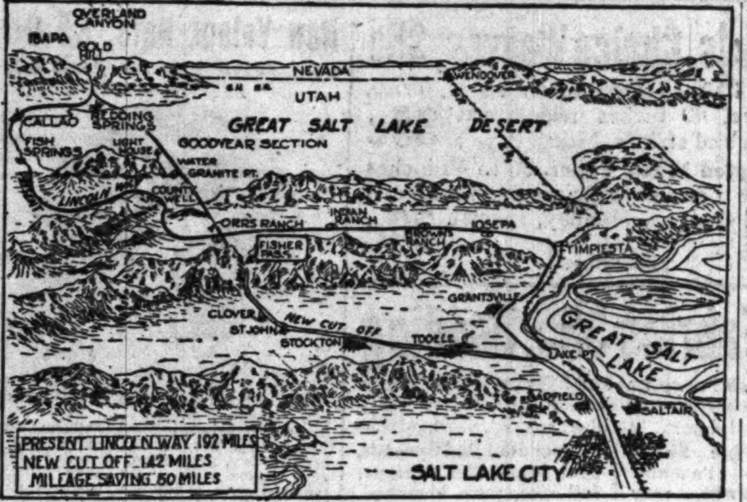
BRIDGING THE AMERICAN DESERT

Where New Motor Road Is Being Built to Eliminate Historic Western Barrier to Transcontinental Travel.

A Scene in Fisher Pass, Where Dynamite Will Open the Way for a Perfect Mountain Road.



The Old Desert Road Is Being Abandoned for a New Route Which Cuts 50 Miles from the Touring Distance Between Salt Lake City and Ely, Nev.

Lincoln Highway Opens New Trail to Pacific Coast

BY AUSTIN F. BEMENT.

[Secretary, Lincoln Highway Association.]

AT last the Lincoln highway is to be for the first time what its founders back in 1913 urged—"a continuous, connected, improved highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific."

The great American desert is to be bridged; the money has been raised; surveys have been completed; the route has been settled upon and work is under way.

A new road eliminating the winding, tortuous trail which has been the only connection between the east and the Pacific coast will be constructed—a direct short cut through the mountains and across the desert of western Utah, which will cut fifty miles from the transcontinental route and eleminate one-quarter of the entire distance by road across the state of Utah.

From the days when Jim Bridger in 1826 made his lonely migration to the valley of the great Salt lake to the present day the desolate region south and west of this great body of water has acted as a natural barrier to all through traffic east or west.

Thousands have perished on these waterless wastes, surrounded by bare and rugged mountains, whose narrow passes were piled deep with snow in winter, and where in summer the merciless heat of the sun left the deep ruts of the slow plodding prairie schooners dotted with the bleaching bones of animals and men.

The Utah route of the Lincoln highway has presented a situation which local means were inadequate to remedy. It has existed at a strategic point through which all traffic crossing the continent within a radius of 500 miles north and south must flow to reach the junction point at Ely, Nevada, where travel for northern and southern California diverts. The Utah section is the door to the Pacific coast on the central route.

When the Lincoln highway was laid out there was no other road—there is as yet no other road. The present desolate trail through unpopulated regions has been the only outlet to the west, and its condition from Garfield, Utah, west and south, deviously winding around various mountain ranges and through low lying valleys of alkali and mud, volcanic ash and salt, was frequently impassable.

Tales of the difficulties encountered in crossing this section have kept thousands from entering the great American playground of the west, and from enjoying the marvelous motor roads of the Pacific coast.

There has been little reason for the state of Utah to expend any of its meager road funds on the improvement of this road, which has served practically no local population, and, if anything, the section has been continuously getting worse as the heavy volume of transcontinental travel has rutted the desert flats when wet and ground them into deep dust when dry.

The Lincoln Highway association's problem lay in making use of as much as possible of the adequately constructed Utah state highways, and opening up a route direct through the mountains and across the desert, which could be followed in wet or dry weather by either passenger or freight vehicles with confidence and comfort.

Never before had the construction of a road across such a subformation as the Great American Desert been contemplated. It is possible that there is no other such region in the world as the bottom of this ancient lake, crusted over on top with a surface skin of hardened alkali, sand, and salt, and kept constantly moist below by the seepage from the surrounding mountains.

The flat presents a deceptive appearance of solidity, and many tourists wondering why it should be necessary to follow the terrible roads around the southern edge of the desert when the flat to the west presented the even, smooth, and hard appearance of a concrete surface, have tried to negotiate the desert with disastrous consequences.

Two years of careful investigations, continuous trips over various routes across this region, consultation with the trained highway engineers of the state, and talks with inhabitants of the region who were familiar with the desert and mountains under all weather conditions and had observed them for years, resulted in the association's determining upon the route which is now to be constructed.

To connect up the proposed short-cut across the desert it was found necessary to open the pass connecting the two valleys.

It was discovered that the desert road could be built for $100,000 and the mountain pass for $25,000. In other words, the final construction of the historic cutoff across the desert, which would be to transcontinental highway transportation what the Lucin cutoff is to the Southern Pacific railroad, required a fund of only $125,000 to effect a result commensurate in importance with that for which the railroad company had expended $6,000,000.

In November, 1916, Carl G. Fisher, vice president of the association, pledged to it a sum of $25,000 for the opening up of Johnson's pass in the Onaqui mountains, and at the same time the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company, of which F. A. Seiberling, then a director of the association, was president, pledged $75,000 toward the desert work.

A final inspection of the desert situation was made in August, 1917, by officers of the association, headed by Mr. Seiberling. Mr. Seiberling and his party were stranded for hours without water in the center of the desert, in an attempt to cross it at the point of the proposed construction, and so impressed was he with the need for a proper road at this strategic point that, finding the fund of $75,000 contributed by his company for the work inadequate, Mr. Seiberling personally pledged an additional $25,000.

This total sum seemed adequate, but no responsible contractor could not be found who would undertake the work which, unique as it is, seemed to defy any possibility of exact advance estimation of its cost. No bids could be secured, with the result that in March Mr. Seiberling, then president of the Lincoln Highway association, in a letter to Gov. Bamberger of Utah, chairman of the Utah state road commission, offered to place the entire fund in the hands of that commission to be used by them in the construction of the work.

The association has placed in the hands of the state of Utah $31,250, or 25 per cent of the total fund, and deposited the remainder of the fund in escrow in Salt Lake City, to be turned over to the state as the work progresses.

Construction has already started in Johnson's Pass, to be known hereafter as Fisher Pass, and using its convict labor and possibly federal German prisoners from Fort Douglas, the state expects to accomplish the entire work by fall.

The state of Utah will spend this summer on the Lincoln highway, in addition to the association's fund, considerably over $175,000, and the tourists of 1919 can cross the valleys and deserts of the state, which presented heart breaking difficulties to the pioneers of 1830 to '49 on a perfect motor road.

The association's plans contemplate the permanent marking of the sections and the erection of a lighthouse and rest station on the east side of the desert.

The new route will be opened in the fall with appropriate ceremonies, in which Gov. Bamberger of Utah and Gov. Boyle of Nevada will take part. And it requires no great stretch of the imagination to believe that the gathered shades of Jim Bridger, Kit Carson, Brigham Young, Donner, Fremont, Lander, and the other intrepid pioneers who braved the dangers of this region of desolation and advanced along this same western trail will be there, too.

By and About the Folks Who Make 'Em and Sell 'Em

THE present Packard model, known technically as the "third series twin six," will be continued indefinitely. "In a time like the present," says an announcement issued last week, "the company feels that the bringing out of a separate model merely for the sake of change and of slight improvement would not be warranted. Packard prefers to devote its engineering and manufacturing talent to more urgent work."

A reorganization of the Warner Lenz company has brought into it new interests from several sources; among those who have identified themselves with the concern are Roy D. Chapin, president of the Hudson Motor Car company and chairman of highways transport committee of the Council of National Defense, and C. C. Winningham, formerly the Hudson advertising manager. E. C. Patterson of Chicago remains at the head of the organization, which is now to be known as the Warner-Patterson company.

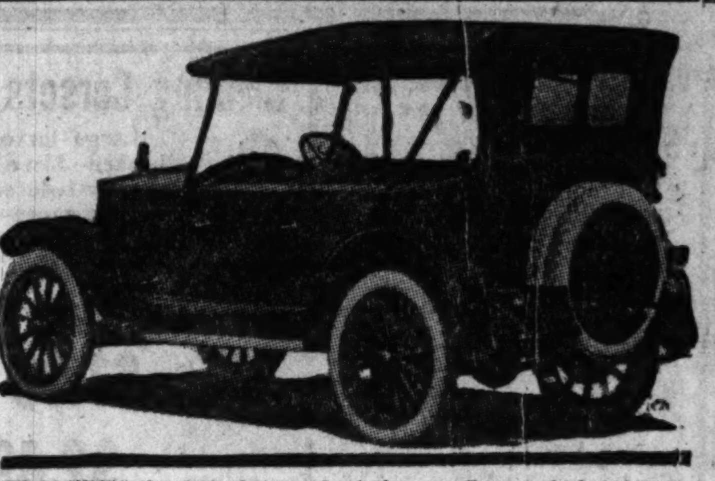
Despite bad weather and poor roads, a Haynes roadster recently established the remarkable record of averaging thirty-five miles an hour for twelve hours' running time, fifteen miles to the gallon of gasoline, and more than 200 miles without the use of the fan, on a trip from Milwaukee to Camp Custer, near Battle Creek, Mich. J. E. Nelson of Milwaukee, who made the trip, broke his fan belt just outside Laporte, Ind., and went on without it.

The elastic qualities of an ivory billiard ball are said to have provided the inspiration for the Hyatt roller bearing. John Hyatt was something of a billiard player, according to a story which came to light the other day, and when a friend had trouble with the bearings in a sugar cane macerator Hyatt, recalling the billiard ball, decided they were too rigid. This led to the idea of making a bearing with hollow helically wound flexible rollers.

Harry J. Warner, for many years vice president of the Continental Motor company, has become vice president of the Federal Motor Truck company and will have charge of the concern's production. Officials of the company estimate that, whereas there were but 400,000 motor trucks in the United States a few months ago, there will be 650,000 at the end of the present year.

Work will begin shortly, it is announced, on a new Chicago factory for Master Trucks, Inc. A large tract of land has been purchased and the details of construction are now being worked out.

A DEBUTANTE



HERE'S the first photograph of the new Essex, which holds the distinction of being the only real motor car debutante of the summer. It is not precisely accurate to identify it as a four cylinder Hudson, but it is a four cylinder car, built in the Hudson factory, to be marketed by a newly formed company composed largely of Hudson officials, and to be sold through Hudson dealers. The car is designed primarily to provide high speed and racy lines at a figure considerably more moderate than these qualities have usually commanded. The price has been fixed at $1,395.

New Section of Sheridan Road Open in August

PLACING of the concrete on the last "missing link" in Sheridan road through the northern part of Winnetka was finished last week, and the entire two mile stretch will be opened with appropriate ceremonies Aug. 10. This will complete a continuous paved highway on the Sheridan road route to the south limits of Glencoe. A mile and a half of the new section is now open, to the north of the present construction work, but it has not been much traveled because the commonly used detour takes motorists farther north.

The opening of a forty foot concrete roadway through Niles Center to Brown's Corners will be celebrated in the former town today, weather permitting, with a community dance on the pavement. The new stretch adds about half a mile to the existing Lincoln avenue pavement northwest from the city limits.

Motorists entering Chicago from the south report a flourishing speed trap in operation on the Dixie highway just beyond Chicago Heights. Several arrests have been made in cases where the drivers have insisted they were going not faster than fifteen miles an hour.

The Chicago Motor club directed the attention of its members last week to two villages which have placed motorcycle policemen on their highways and are enforcing the speed limit strictly. One is Evergreen Park, through which Ninety-fifth street west of Western avenue runs, and where a number of motorists have been arrested. The other is Hillside, west of Bellwood, near the intersection of Wolf and Butterfield roads.

MONTGOLFIER WAR BALLOON 1794
SAFETY TREAD

When War Invaded The Air

THE eyes of the army were first set in the sky when the French Revolutionary forces, using the first war balloon, won the Battle of Fleurus, 1794.

It was a Montgolfier balloon, the type the Montgolfier brothers developed from Cavallo's crude experiments in 1766 with hydrogen-filled pig bladders.

With the exception of General McClellan's balloons at the siege of Richmond, the use of aircraft in war languished until the present conflict.

Goodrich follows the flag into the sky.

One hundred and twenty-five years after the first war balloon, the battles of the air find not only Goodrich dirigibles and Montgolfier balloons in the thick of it, but also—

The Experts Say---

THE small cracks that frequently make their appearance on the edge of the fender or other sheet metal parts will rapidly become big breaks unless they are nipped in the bud. Drill a small hole in the metal and through the crack, near its outer end. Slip a rivet through and run on a burr and then rivet the head firmly. This prevents vibration of the edges of the crack, which is the trouble that induces the spreading of the crack. A brushful of paint will make this repair invisible.

One of the common troubles encountered in the brake assembly is a tendency to chattering, which is extremely annoying. This is generally induced by a deposit of burnt oil on the bands and it may generally be cured by applying hot kerosene oil to the parts. If this does not serve the only remedy is to burn off the deposits with a blow torch. This operation is carried out by removing the bands and soaking them in gasoline over night and then applying the torch. The propeller shaft brake is peculiarly liable to this trouble, as, if the transmission case contains a little too much oil, the excess lubricant is thrown through the shaft brushing onto the bands. If an application of graphite is used instead of oil for lubricating the brake bands, it will lessen this trouble.

There are many methods of cleaning the muffler, from beating on it with a hammer to blowing out the carbon with air. Here is a very effective way of cleaning a muffler badly choked with soot and carbon. Remove the muffler and plug up one end with a wooden plug. Pour in the other end a solution made up of half a pint of concentrated lye to half a gallon of boiling water. Shake the muffler vigorously, pour out the solution, and rinse with boiling water. This lye solution burns the hands or clothes, when it touches them, so be careful of it.

In engines having demountable heads and valves in the head, the removal of valves is a matter of difficulty unless one has found out just the proper trick. The head should be laid on the bench, right side up, and the compressor slipped on, after which a wire should be fastened about the handle of the compressor and then be anchored to the leg of the bench or table. Next lift up on the handle; this pressees the spring down, the lock may be removed from the stem very easily, and the job is done.

The ordinary way of removing old bushings from spindle arms, etc., is by hack saw or punch. Here is a simpler method of doing the trick: Place the part to be operated on in a vise and give a hand tap of the size that will thread a hole in the bushinig a few turns in. If a rod or bolt is now pushed in from the other end, the tap may be driven out without difficulty and the old bushing will come with it.

It is perfectly possible to repair a broken pipe line, such as that which carries the fuel, simply by reaming out one side and filing down the other, after the edges have been evened off, and then thrusting the smaller end into the larger. Wrapping a repair of this kind with tape and then with fine wire will hold the junction for an indefinite period.

QUESTIONS and ANSWERS by HIGH SPEED

Because of the large volume of requests for touring information and the relatively small amount of space available for answering them, readers who wish measurably prompt replies are advised to enclose a stamped and self-addressed envelope with their inquiries, so that they may be answered by mail. Questions of general interest, such as those pertaining to driving and the care of the car, will be answered as far as possible in this column.

Kindly inform me as to the best automobile route, considering mileage and condition of the roads, between Tuscola, Ill., and Port Huron, Mich. I wish to make the trip soon.

L. A. COOPER, Tuscola, Ill.

Your best way would be to drive from Tuscola through Newman, Hume, Chrisman, Montezuma, Bainbridge, and Danville (Ind.) to Indianapolis and then go northeast through Eden, Pendleton, Anderson, Muncie, Bluffton, Fort Wayne, Hicksville, Bryan, Wauseon, Adrian, Tecumseh, Saline, Ypsilanti, Detroit, Mount Clemens, and St. Clair to Port Huron.

Will you please publish the best route from Chicago to Buffalo, N. Y., by motor?

M. F. MARBOURG, Chicago.

The best route runs through Gary, Michigan City, South Bend, Elkhart, Goshen, Ligonier, Kendallville, Waterloo, Bryan, Archbold, Napoleon, Weston, Portage, Bradner, Helena, Fremont, Norwalk, Oberlin, Elyria, Cleveland, Erie, and Westville to Buffalo.

What is your opinion of fuel intensifiers, such as the liquids and tablets which are put in the gas to make it give more power and better economy?

L. K. E., Port Huron, Mich.

I do not believe that any of these additions to the gasoline will do what the average maker claims. I do not doubt that there are liquids which when mixed with the fuel will give more power, but then nothing is said of the affect of the adulterant on the engine metal. The usual claims for such a thing as camphor balls (naphthalene) are that it will give more power and better economy, but I have yet to find any truth in this statement.

There is a rattle somewhere in the chassis of my car, but I haven't been able to locate it, because it stops as soon as the car is still. Where do you suppose it lies?

J. F., Chicago.

Get some one to drive your car down a long, gentle grade; shut off the engine, while you are standing on the running board. You may be able to locate the rattle at once. Noises of this kind are generally caused by loose mud guards, brakes, or some of the operating rods, which extend from the levers or pedals to the various parts. It is difficult for me to tell what it is in your case, not knowing the nature of the noise.

Why do the public and factories call an ordinary six cylinder automobile motor a four cycle motor? I maintain it is not a four cycle motor, but a four stroke per cycle motor. Am I right? If not, please explain.

LESLIE KENNEDY, Racine, Wis.

It is simply a matter of language. "Four stroke per cycle" explains things more fully, but "four cycle" is a more convenient phrase and probably is accurate enough. It doesnot mean that a motor has four cycles. There is one cycle, completed in four. It does not mean that a motor has four cycle. In the same way, a "six" engine does not mean six engines but one engine with six cylinders.

WHEAT!

This is the most favorable time to buy wheat land in the Northwest, and the Davidson District is the most favorable place. The high price for wheat, oats, and barley is having its effect on land values, and when we market our 1918 crop, which promises to be a bumper, land prices are going to jump.

Our proposition is ideal for actual settlers, but nonresidents can own a farm under our plan and we will look after your farming interests. People of moderate means can get a start toward independence. You know that the farmer is getting high prices for everything, and you can increase your income materially by farming yourself.

Don't kick about high prices for food. Get busy and produce some yourself. A card will bring, by mail, full information with a book of fine views of farming in Western Canada.

QUESTIONS

Ques.—Will you earn as much money after the war?

ANS.—No; there will be a large surplus of labor and naturally lower wages.

Ques.—Will work be as plentiful as now?

ANS.—No; munition plants must shut down, followed by a general reorganization on a peace basis requiring perhaps years to accomplish.

Ques.—How will the millions of soldiers be cared for when they return?

ANS.—Soldiers will naturally and deservedly be given preference for employment.

Ques.—How are you to protect yourself and family?

ANS.—By acquiring a piece of good farm land.

TO ACQUIRE a good piece of farm land may seem to some like a big problem, whereas, in reality, it is no problem at all when solved for you by the plan of the "Swigart Land Company." By a little effort on your part you can soon become a farm owner of a farm of 10, 20, 40, 60, or 80 acres of the finest hardwood land located in Kalkaska or Antrim counties, in Michigan's great fruit and grain district.

THIS RICH SOIL, which will some day sell as high as land in Illinois or Iowa, can be purchased for $15 to $30 per acre. No other organization offers such splendid inducements. You can buy on easy monthly payments and as low as $10 to $100 down. Free insurance is given while you are paying for the land. We loan money to make improvements. We furnish services free of expert farm advisers. These and many other features, including the kinds of crops grown, live stock raised, fruit orchards, cities, schools, etc., are described in detail in our beautiful booklet. Write for it today—it is free for the asking—and take your first step toward getting your own farm home.

COME ON OUR EXCURSION OF July 23. R. R. fare allowed on your purchase. Free auto trips over the lands. Now is the time to see the crops growing. Offices open weekdays, Monday evenings, and Saturday afternoons.

YOUR OPPORTUNITY TO ENGAGE IN GROWING THE FOOD YOUR COUNTRY NEEDS.

Many of us are thinking about it, many feel that it is not only the wise thing to do but that it is absolutely necessary—that all must get out of nonessentials and into productive lines.

Here is just the opening you may be looking for: A 40 acre farm, fenced, with some of the land ready for crops; new 6 room house; in a section where something to eat may be grown practically every month in the year, where not only one but two to four crops may be taken from the same land every year, in a beautiful country with a splendid healthy climate; no severe winter, no expensive clothing or fuel to eat up the proceeds from crops.

You can have one of these complete farms for only $2,000, on reasonable terms, and they are the biggest value in the country.

Call and see the owner, or address Suite 1404 E, 20 E. Jackson-blvd., Chicago, Ill. Phone Harrison 6956.

WEEK'S REAL ESTATE MARKET BREAKS PRECEDENT BY ACTIVITY

BIG DEALS MARK BUSINESS AND FACTORY SITES

Michigan Avenue Link Trade Feature of Week.

The week's real estate market was a genuine surprise in that it was one of the best of the year. Usually there is little to choose between the week which includes the Fourth and the one which follows, both being marked in brokers' almanacs as representing low market ebb of the year. The week of the Fourth ran fairly true to form in that there was nothing of any importance doing in any class of property, with the possible exception of apartments, in which there was considerable activity, but last week's market violated precedent and furnished a surprisingly large number of transactions which stand for something, and which included nearly all classes of property with the possible exception of apartments.

Both manufacturing and business property, which were conspicuous by their absence during the activities of the previous week, were particularly in evidence. Business property was represented by two especially important transactions in downtown and outside sections, while the Calumet district furnished two notable items in an industrial way. These were the reported plans of the Baldwin Locomotive works for the construction of a plant, to cost about $5,000,000, on its East Chicago, Ind., property, and the absorption of the Iroquois Iron company and the Mark Manufacturing company by the Steel and Tube Company of America.

Stockyards Deal.

The stockyards district also furnished a highly important transaction in manufacturing property involving the erection of a big packing plant, the first unit of which will be a nine story and basement cold storage warehouse, to cost about $800,000, for the William Davies company, packers, a Toronto concern. All of these transactions give to the week's business unusual importance, and, together with a fairly free movement of the cheaper grades of property, make a remarkably good showing.

The downtown transaction is of unusual interest because of the fact it is the first transaction in the proposed widened part of North Michigan avenue, north of Randolph street, to follow the commencement of work on the boulevard link project. It was the purchase by Mrs. Clara F. Bass of Peterboro, N. H., from Mrs. Ellen I. Hale and Grace M. Vance of the property at the southeast corner of the avenue and Lake street, lot 72x69½ feet, improved with a seven story building now vacant, for $251,280.

This gives Mrs. Bass a total frontage of 132 feet at this point.

$100,000 Improvement.

The building on the property was for twenty years occupied by E. L. Mansure & Co., who several months ago bought the property formerly occupied by the Cloverdale Creamery company at the southeast corner of Indiana avenue and Sixteenth street at a valuation of $350,000. The part of the building remaining after the widening will be remodeled at a cost of about $100,000 by Architects Mundie & Jensen.

The city has taken for the widening of the street 61½ feet from the front of the properties on the east side of the street, so that the price paid by Mrs. Bass is on the basis of $450,000 for the entire original holding, as the sellers have received from the city $198,750 for the part taken in widening. For the remaining part, which she has just purchased, Mrs. Bass paid at the rate of $3,433 a front foot and $50.20 a square foot. The building on the property was for twenty years occupied by E. L. Mansure & Co., who several months ago bought the property formerly occupied by the Cloverdale Creamery company at the southeast corner of Indiana avenue and Sixteenth street at a valuation of $350,000. The part of the building remaining after the widening will be remodeled at a cost of about $100,000 by Architects Mundie & Jensen.

Buys Sixty Feet in 1915.

Mrs. Bass acquired the sixty feet adjoining the corner, just purchased by her, from William B. Hale in March, 1915, for $240,000, subject at that time to a mortgage of $100,000, through the same brokers. His price was at the rate of $4,000 a front foot and about $30 a square fot for the entire 60x130 feet. This parcel is also now only 69½ feet deep, and for the 61½ feet taken by the city Mrs. Bass received $137,091. This property formerly was owned by the E. J. Warner estate, from which Mr. Hale purchased the fee after obtaining a ninety-nine year lease for the property in 1912 through White & Tabor.

The purchase of Mrs. Bass is regarded by some brokers as indicating not only the trend of ownership but also what owners think of that district, and it is thought that other owners between Randolph street and the river are likely to consolidate their present holdings with adjoining parcels through purchase from those willing to sell.

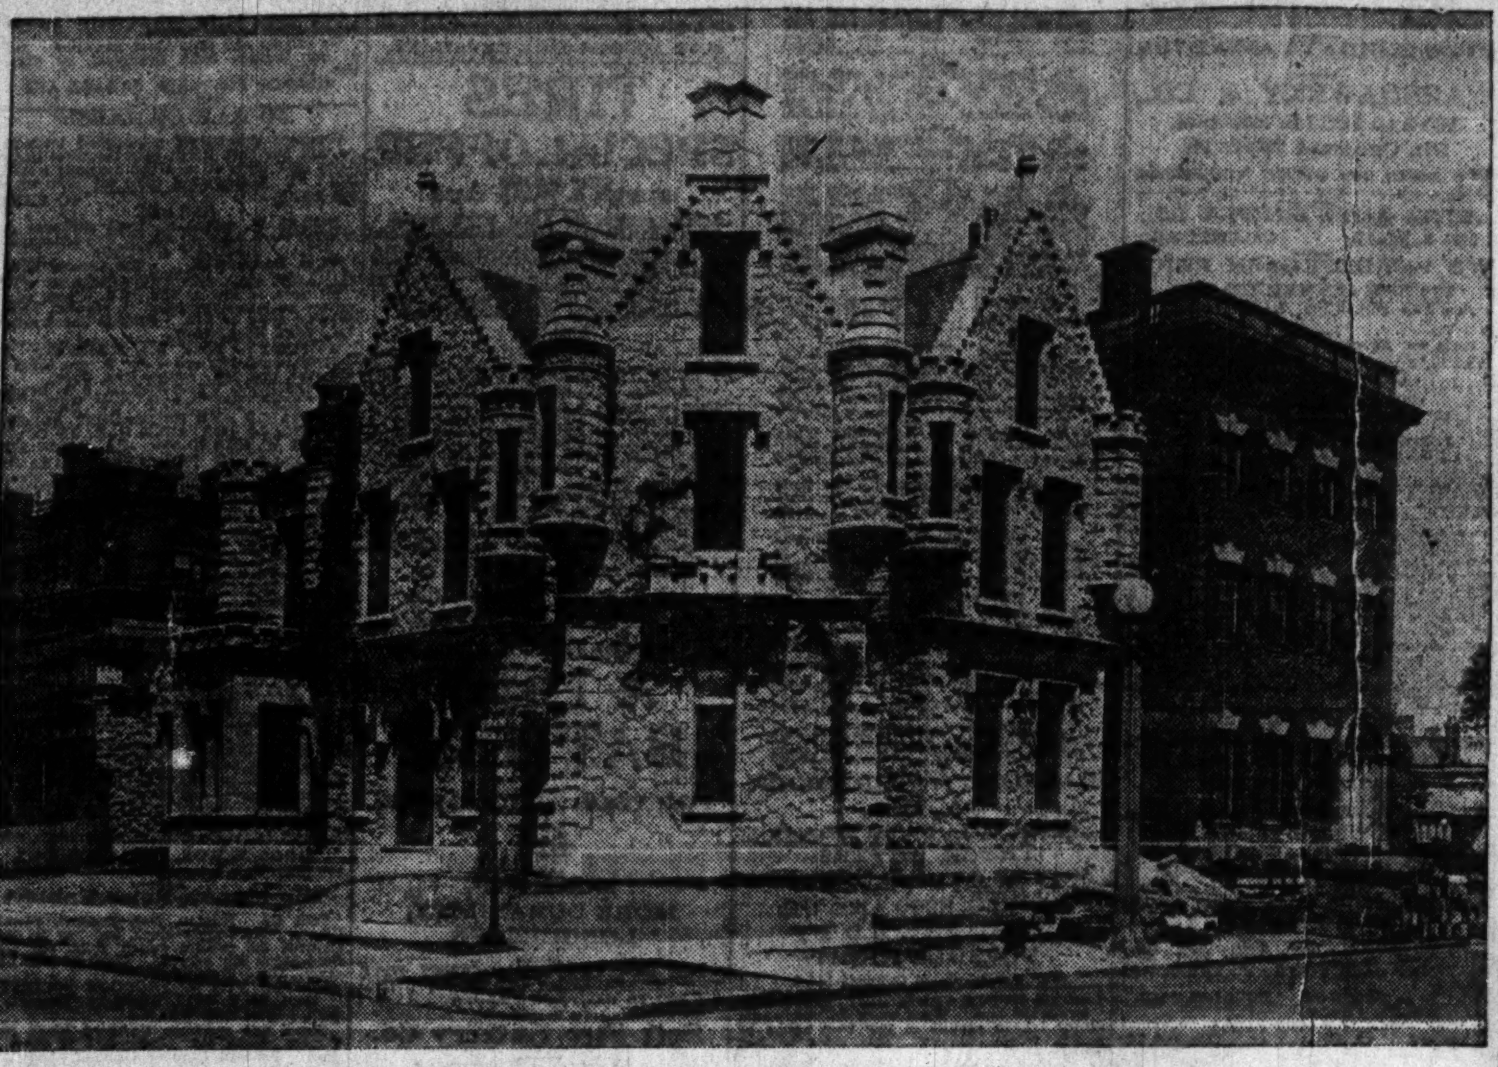
In connection with the purchase of the property Mrs. Bass has given a trust deed to the Chicago Title and Trust company to secure a loan of $150,000, running five years at 5½ per cent.

Sheridan Road Property in Rogers Park Sold

A transaction in Rogers Park property was made a matter of record in which Thomas C. Coorlas acquired from Christ M. Damascus the property at the southeast corner of Sheridan road and Chase avenue for an indicated consideration of $40,000, subject to an incumbrance of $26,000. The property, to which Damascus took title a few months ago, is 190x170 feet, lot dimensions, and is improved with a twelve room stone dwelling now occupied by Albert Pick under a two years' lease with monthly rental of $200.

SHATTERED ROMANCE RECALLED BY RAZING OF LINK "CASTLE"

Fair Colleen Changed Her Mind and Never Was Its Mistress.



In the wholesale razing of buildings along North Michigan avenue in connection with the boulevard link project many structures of historical, social, and romantic interest have been or are being demolished.

In the latter connection a unique interest attaches to what is generally known as the "Castle" at the northwest corner of North Michigan avenue (formerly Lincoln parkway) and Erie street, erected over a quarter of a century ago by Henry I. Sheldon as a home for the beautiful Irish girl he met when on a tour of Ireland, just after leaving college.

According to the story it was a case of "love at first sight," but she was reluctant to leave the home of her father, a handsome castle overlooking the ocean. Finally, on the promise of Mr. Sheldon to erect a similar building overlooking Lake Michigan, she promised to become his wife.

He hurried to Chicago, purchased a lot which commanded an unobstructed view of the lake at that time and proceeded to erect the building now upon it.

After the "Castle" was completed he is said to have returned to Ireland to claim his bride, but, exercising woman's prerogative, the colleen had changed her mind.

On his return to this country Sheldon took up his residence in his "castle" with his sister, Miss Mattie Sheldon, and resided there until a few years ago, when he sold the property to Arthur Farwell. He never married. Once a year a great children's party was given, to which all of the youngsters of the neighborhood from 2 to 10 years were invited. The work of razing the building has just begun.

DEAL OPENS WAY TO ERECT A NEW PACKING PLANT

A deal was reported in the stockyards district of special interest as involving the erection of a large packing plant, the first unit of which will be a nine story and basement cold storage warehouse, to cost in the neighborhood of $800,000. It will be erected by the William Davies company, packers, of Toronto, Ont., on a part of the three blocks which the company has about acquired from James S., John T., and Woodbury Agar, connected with the John Agar company, packers.

The property comprises the two blocks fronting west on Union avenue, from Forty-first street to Root street and from Root street to Forty-second street, also the block fronting east on Wallace street between Forty-first and Root streets, being blocks 9, 10, and 15, Superior court partition. The Agars, who have been quietly buying in the blocks indicated for some time, have just closed the purchase from J. Sargeant Cram, Bronson Winthrop, and others of New York for the first two blocks indicated, except the 72x125 feet at the southeast corner of Union avenue and Root street, for a reported consideration of $49,500.

It is reported the Agars originally planned to occupy the property with their business, but subsequently decided to sell to the Davies company. W. D. Kerfoot & Co. represented the sellers in the two last blocks acquired, while A. J. Montague & Son have represented the Agars in all of their transactions.

440 Acres Are Added to County's Forest Reserve

The forest reserve district has closed the purchase of 444.75 acres, for which a total consideration of $117,801 was paid. The most important comprised 327.8 acres adjoining Oak Forest on the north, which was bought from R. H. Badenoch for $85,270, at the rate of $260 an acre.

From Lloyd G. Spencer sixty-four acres at the west end of Palos Park, south of One Hundred and Nineteenth street, was acquired for $16,000; from Anthony Batek 33.13 acres on the north branch of the Chicago river west of the Northwestern railroad right of way, east of Schermerville, was acquired for $11,428, and from Anna Kinball 20.41 acres south of Archer road and the drainage canal for $5,103.

NEW $5,000,000 PLANT PROSPECT STIRS CALUMET

The Calumet district figured conspicuously in the week's news in the reported plans of the Baldwin Locomotive works to proceed with the erection of a $5,000,000 plant on its property at Calumet, in East Chicago, Ind. The property in question comprises about 370 acres which the company acquired about six years ago with the purpose of making it the site of a new large plant. In fact, the preliminary work of construction was begun, but soon after dropped, and while reports have been current from time to time of the company's purpose to resume building operations, nothing tangible has developed until the announcement from New York early in last week that it had been decided to go ahead with this work.

It was stated that specifications for the various buildings are now before structural mills and fabricating shops calling for 12,000 tons of steel. It is estimated the plant will cost about $5,000,000, the steel works alone to cost about $1,200,000, while the equipment will probably cost between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000. The company already has large contracts from the government, and it is expected to be awarded an additional contract for 100 to 150 locomotives by the railroad administration.

Head of Firm Reticent.

President Alba B. Johnson of the Baldwin company at Philadelphia, while admitting that tentative plans were being considered, is said to have denied that anything was contemplated at present. The general belief is, however, that the New York report is well founded.

Another highly important event was the announcement that the Mark Manufacturing company and the Iroquois Iron company have been acquired by the Steel and Tube Company of America, which will become one of the largest and most complete independent steel companies in the west and will have $32,000,000 invested in its properties. Interested in the new company are interests identified with the By-Products Coke corporation, Pickands, Mather & Co., the Youngstown Sheet Tube company, the interests identified with Clayton Mark, and the group represented by Ferdinand and Henry J. Schlessinger of Milwaukee.

Began Two Years Ago.

The consolidation began two years ago, when these interests acquired practically all of the stock of the Iroquois company and it became allied with the By-Products Coke corporation in operation.

The new company will have a yearly capacity of 750,000 tons of pig iron and 450,000 tons of finished steel. It is evident this capacity will soon be enlarged, since the building plans of the Mark company alone a year ago contemplated an annual capacity of 500,000 tons of finished steel. The new plants and improvements which the company will have when it begins business under the new name will be a 600 ton blast furnace just finished by the Mark company, a complete Bessemer plant, an open hearth steel department with a capacity of at least 250,000 tons, plate, blooming, billet, skelp, and pipe mills, and dock and harbor facilities for the largest ore vessels.

OFFERED UTILITIES SECRETARYSHIP.

Springfield, Ill., July 13.—The resignation of R. V. Prather, secretary of the state public utilities commission, is effective Monday. The position has been offered to an eastern Illinois man, it was announced. The place pays $4,500.

ASK RECEIVER FOR CHICAGO MAIL ORDER HOUSE

Charges that a considerable amount of stock was sold in violation of the "blue sky" laws of various states upon which no recovery from subscribers for amounts unpaid can be obtained are made in a petition filed in the Circuit court yesterday asking for the appointment of a receiver for the Winthrop-Ives company, a mail order house, with headquarters at 1243 South Wabash avenue.

The complainants named in the bill are John L. Cleary, Herman Deippel, Herman Schlager, William E. Moellering, Walter Trapnell, August Smosky, Frank L. Switzer, W. C. Burger, Charles A. Zeigler, and Anthony Mislinski, stockholders of the company. The concern, which was organized under the Delaware laws in 1916 with a capital of $250,000, now has $1,500,000 stock authorized.

While Charles and William H. Isaacs, who are named as defendants, at the end of 1917 gave out a statement showing assets of $324,000 and liabilities of but $160,000, the petition sets forth that during the year $300,000 was received from the sale of stock and approximately $200,000 from the sale of merchandise certificates. In spite of this, it is claimed, tangible assets do not exceed $80,000. It is claimed that the Isaacs, who held a majority of the stock, voted more than $50,000 in salaries since the company's organization. The company has offices in a number of New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio cities, besides the Chicago office.

SAYS CHICAGO'S NOT OVERBUILT; RAZE THE SHACKS

Building Commissioner Henry Bostrom in his report of building operations for the first half of the year, which shows a falling off of about 60 per cent, as compared with the same period in 1917, takes issue with the many real estate men who have asserted that Chicago was overbuilt. Mr. Bostrom says:

"A careful survey in this direction will prove that the town is not overbuilt as to housing facilities for its population, but that on the other hand more buildings should be erected. Buildings that are untenanted on account of decay and bad housing conditions should be removed.

"The depreciation of buildings in general has been the cause of lowering the value of property. They should be removed and replaced by newer and more modern structures. The same applies to manufacturing plants."

MOUTH HELD LIGHT.

Dr. Alfred Kahn of New York university has invented an ingenious light which the physician may hold in his mouth and thereby leave his hands free for the purpose of making examination.

TRANSFERS SHOW A FALLING OFF FOR HALF YEAR

As was to be expected, the transfer figures for the first half of the year show a considerable falling off in respect to the number as well as total consideration, although much less than seemed probable two or three months ago, the June figures showing a decided improvement over the earlier months.

For the six months there were 22,365 deeds filed for record with a total consideration of $30,872,262, as compared with 26,386 and total considerations of $49,126,921 for the corresponding period of 1917.

This is a loss of 4,021 in number and $18,253,750 in considerations. The June figures are 3,880, with total considerations of $4,833,907, as against 4,077 and total considerations of $5,960,216, a loss in number of 197 and in consideration of $1,126,309.

Under the Torrens system there were 2,039 deeds filed for record, with total considerations of $1,702,076 for the first half of the present year, as against 2,573 with total considerations of $2,586,805 for the corresponding period of 1917, a loss of 534 in number and $884,729 in considerations. Applications for initial registration show a large falling off, the number being 271 for the present year as against 517 for the same period in 1917.

INDIAN HILL TRACT BOUGHT FOR HOME SITES

Edwin J. Newgard, who took title about five years ago to a tract of eighty acres adjoining the Indian Hill Country club, has just conveyed the land to A. W. Shaw, Frederick A. Delano, and Rush C. Butler, for whom it was acquired for residential purposes for themselves. Mr. Shaw's parcel comprises about twenty-six acres, Mr. Butler's about fourteen acres, and Mr. Delano's about eleven acres. The additional twenty-nine acres has been conveyed to the Northern Trust company, as trustee, for the joint benefit of Mr. Shaw, Mr. Butler, and L. G. Walker of the Shaw-Walker company of Jackson, Mich.

It is stated that around 100,000 shrubs and trees have been set out on the property during the last four years. In the planting, which was done by Mr. Nergard, a bridle path has been laid out connecting with that in the Indian Hill club grounds, running through dense woods owned by Mr. Shaw, Mr. Walker, and Mr. Butler. During the last two or three years attractive residences have been erected in that immediate vicinity by John Ott, Marshall Schoenthaler, W. J. Norton, H. Spaulding Coffin, and others.

FLAT PROPERTY SHOWS SLUMP IN WEEK'S TRADING

$52,000 Deal on North Side Corner Largest of the Week.

As indicated elsewhere, apartment property made a poor showing in the week's market. During the previous week it was the only class of property which made any sort of a showing, furnishing several large transactions as well as a large number of medium sized and smaller deals, while for the week just closed there was a dearth of transactions of every kind.

The fifteen apartment building of four and five rooms with 105x150 feet of ground at the northeast corner of Montrose boulevard and Magnolia avenue, with a gross annual rental of $7,410, has been sold by Alfred Parsons to Frederick W. Spelz for an indicated consideration of $45,000, subject to an incumbrance of $31,000. In part payment the purchaser conveyed the vacant 100 feet front in Pratt boulevard sixty-four feet west of Ashland boulevard, for an indicated consideration of $12,500, the purchaser giving back a part purchase money mortgage for $5,000. Tynan the six flat building at 11003-07 South Vernon avenue for a reported consideration of $24,000, the purchaser conveying in payment for the equity property at One Hundred and Third street and Michigan avenue and cash. Charles H. Brandt represented both parties.

The six apartment building at 5615-17 Calumet avenue, lot 50 feet front, has been conveyed by Fanny Samuels to Christian H. Henning for a reported consideration of $24,000, the purchaser conveying in part payment twenty lots at Gary, Ind. J. T. Foley of Hughes, Smith & Co. was the broker.

Edgar W. Burns has purchased from Edward J. and William H. Kelly the apartment property with 35x150 feet of ground at 5326 Michigan avenue for a reported consideration of $13,000, subject to an incumbrance of $12,000, conveying in part payment the two story stone front residence at 4825 Vincennes avenue with 25 feet of ground at a valuation of $8,000, clear. The four story eight apartment building of 7 rooms at 717-19 Oakwood boulevard, lot 50x150 feet, with gross annual rental of about $5,000, has been sold by Searle S. Barnett to A. A. Raisler of Appleton, Wis., for a reported consideration of $44,000, subject to an incumbrance of $27,000, the buyer giving in exchange a forty-five room hotel at Appleton, known as the Briggs hotel. George W. Stewart represented both parties.

The apartment property at the southeast corner of Fifty-fourth stret and Harper avenue, a twelve flat building on 50x125 feet of ground, has been sold by Carrie R. Taylor to John C. O'Brien for an indicated consideration of $46,000, subject to an incumbrance of $38,000. The building is about 3 years old and has a gross annual rental or about $7,500.

Record was made of the transfer by John T. White to Sherman T. Cooper of the apartment property in Ingleside avenue, 62 feet north of Forty-eighth street, lot 61x95 feet, east front, for an indicated consideration of $33,000, subjected to an incumbrance of $22,000.

McElwee and Mrs. H. H. Walker of ten lots, consideration not disclosed, but said to have been in the neighborhood of $7,500. The lots are 27x125 feet, and the purchasers have started improving with two story brick dwellings which are expected to sell for about $5,000. H. H. Walker & Co. negotiated the sale and have made first mortgage loans of $2,600 on each of the houses.

New $5,000,000 Steel Plant for Birmingham District

Birmingham, Ala., July 13.—One hundred and twenty Semet-Solvay by-products ovens, costing [illegible],000, will be built in the Birmingham district by the Sloss-Sheffield Steel and Iron company. The war industries board has given permission for construction of the plant and the government has contracted for the output of by-products needed in the conduct of the war.

Leases and Loans.

The lease of a large west side high grade manufacturing building by a large clothing house and a lease by the United States government of building space in the north central business district were the features of the week in a leasing way. Outside of this there was nothing doing of any moment in either leases or loans.

The west side lease covers the property at 1901-53 West Twelfth street, just east of Robey street, which has been leased by Ederheimer, Stein & Co., clothing manufacturers, from the American Cigar company for a term of years at a reported term rental of $200,000. The building, which was erected about five years ago, is two stories high, of steel and concrete construction, and is equipped with a sprinkler system, power plant, and freight elevators.

It has a frontage of 500 feet on Twelfth street, with a depth of 120 feet to an alley. Ederheimer, Stein & Co. will make some alterations, installing shower baths for their employés, additional washrooms, and rest rooms, making it thoroughly up to date, and will centralize its various shops, now located in various parts of the city, in the building. Hart & Whetston represented both parties to the transaction.

The government leased from the American Merchants' syndicate, by John Baskerville, president, the six story and basement fireproof building, except the main floor, located at the southwest corner of Superior and St. Clair streets, and near North Michigan avenue. The total floor space taken will approximate 75,000 square feet and will be occupied by the ordnance department, represented by Edmond A. Russell, division ordnance chief of the Chicago district, to be used for office purposes.

The Merchants' syndicate will occupy the first floor of the building with its executive offices. The lease was negotiated by Frederick J. Bowes of the Bowes Realty company, who recently closed the lease of the Pelouze building to the government to be occupied by the central department, United States army. The two transactions give a peculiar distinction to this district in an army way.

Record was made of the lease by Adah F. B. Morgan and Robert Burton to Fred G. Sangster and Stuart Sinnett of the basement, lobby on first floor, and all of second and third floors of building at 2924 East Ninety-second street, from July, 1918, to June 30, 1927, for a term rent of $54,000, payable at the rate of $500 a month, to be used for hotel purposes only.

NEW PROCESSES FOR MAKING COKE SOUGHT BY U. S.

Washington, D. C., July 13.—New processes for making coke are being sought by the government.

Secretary Redfield today announced he has authorized the bureau of standards to make experiments with two methods of coking high volatile coal, the Koppers method, used by a plant in St. Paul, Minn., and the Roberts process, in operation at Canal Dover, O., either of which, if proved commercially practicable, would increase greatly the output of by-product coke by permitting the use of coal hitherto considered unsuited for coking.

Transportation conditions also would benefit, it is said, through the utilization of coal from almost any field, instead of from the restricted area where coking coal now is produced.

Laboratory tests of the Roberts process virtually are complete and the bureau of standards expects to take over operation of the Canal Dover ovens soon with the consent of the owners for further experimentation.

Smith being the architect in charge of the work of construction. These improvements are expected to cost $125,000 and together with the corner building are security for the performance of the terms of the lease.

The ground lease rental is on a graduated basis, beginning with an annual rental of $6,500 for the first five years, increasing to $10,000 for the last seventy-four years. In connection with the transaction Greenebaum Sons Bank and Trust company have underwritten a bond issue loan of $90,000, payable serially in ten years at 6 per cent. Benjamin Gerber, with G. H.
